Home Instruction Special Offer to Our Readers

In order to advertise and introduce their home study music lessons in every locality the International Institute of Music of New York will give free to our readers a complete course of instruction for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Mandolin, Guitar, Banjo, Cello, Brass Instruments or Sight Singing. In return they simply ask that you recommend their institute to your friends after you learn to play.

You may not know one note from another; yet, by their wonderfully simple and thorough method, you can soon learn to play. If you are an advanced player you will receive special

The lessons are sent weekly. They are so simple and easy that they are recommended to any person or little child who can read English. Photographs and drawings make everything plain. Under the institute's free tuition offer you will be asked to pay only a very small amount (averaging-14 cents a week) to cover postage and the necessary sheet music.

No one should everlook this wonderful offer. Tell your friends about it-show this article to them.

The International Institute has successfully taught others and can sucabsolutely nothing whatever about music. The lessons make everything Delaware Valley Camp, No. 131, W. O. W., was a decided success. Every number on the program was much appreciated and the young people enjoyed the material that not even Father Laramie, the good priest from St. Croix, who sometimes came to camp to look after the souls of his half-dozen parishioners, could help him. He was not of the faith, and he had no religious motive in so doing, but his heart was paining him sore, and the priest of the tender eyes had led him on. As the latter had listened his eyes had grown still more tender.

"My son," said the priest when Nat was done, "you are acting worthily of that love."

"But how long will it lest?" Nat had that love

"But how long will it last?" Nat had cried. "Where will it end, for love for the one does not die, and hate for the other still lives."

"In time," answered the priest thoughtfully, "the love must kill the late." Then the priest, in an attempt to divert

"Mais c'est grand dommage."

Though pressed for time, Nat Page still accompanied his brother on his weekly pilgrimage for the sake of that brief glimpse of Julie at the door. From there At the Lovell auction he had bought enough to completely furnish his house including even kitchen utensils. Th act that the furniture was not new gave fact that the furniture was not new gave the rooms a settled appearance. The hand-made wooden chairs, the mahogany high-boy, the old clock and mirrors had been in use a hundred years before he bought them. They brought with them the comfortable hospitality of age.

Hamilton and Guelph extended invitations to celebrate the 12th of July in these cities, but neither of the invitations were accepted.

ed from his brooding before the open fire by a weak knock upon the door. Hurrying to admit the late visitor, he found upon his doorstep Tommy Flint and his father. The two were half frozen and in a pittable state of collapse.

"Lord, man," he exclaimed, as he dragged them in to a place before the fire, "what's the trouble?"

He kindled the kitchen fire in a jiffy, and soon had a pan of ham and eggs on the stove. He set a table before the open fire in the sitting-room, and, bringing in the food, watched the man and boy devour it like starved wild creatures. He saw the hunger leave their eyes and the color return to their skin. The sight turned his thoughts away from himself and did him good. Furthermore, with the presence of these outcasts, the whole house came to life. It was the first time than anyone except himself had been under his roof.

"What are ye plannin' to do?" he asked Flint, as under the influence of food and warmth the old man partly recovered himself.

"I reckon Tommy an' I'll pull out," he swered thoughtfully.
"Where to?"

ouse?" questioned Tommy, big-eyed. Nat nodded.

before the fire as comfortably as though he had always been there.

Nat was well pleased with the arrangement. Not only would this keep the house alive during the week, but it gave him a chance to do something for Tommy. He had always liked the lad. When on the following Saturday he came home after his long walk from St. Croix, it was not to a cold and dark house, but to lighted windows, a fire on the hearth, and a steaming hot supper prepared by Flint. The latter was a good cook, and had spent the entire day in getting things ready.

work of this association is by no means finished yet.
