In West York.

Conservatives in West York are aving a merry battle long before he election starts. The convention ave the nomination to A. J. Anderson, a barrister of West Toronto.

Another Conservative, Len Wallace, refuses to get out of the way, and he balks at the idea of another convention. He is in the field to stay as a straight Conservative.

A. J. Anderson was a member of the Liberal party in 1917, according to "charges" now made against him. While all this is going on Major Streight, the Liberal candidate, is conducting his campaign with remarkable success.

The Jail Problem.

Guelph has had another jail breaking, the governor and the turnkey being badly beaten. Three men got out, but two were recaptured.

The province should by this time have seen the folly of trying to house dangerous men in isolated spots all over the country. The county jail plan may have been all right in its time, but it is sadly out of date now.

Greater protection to society and less expense to the people would be accomplished by centralization of jail facilities.
