Shark steak, regarded as a special dainty by the sailors, will be served as a regular part of the bill-of-fare on the Spray for some time to come. Meanwhile the diving operations are progressing steadily. The expedition has had three or four days of good diving weather each week since its return to the wreck, and each day the divers have spent two or three hours below.

Examination of the sunken ship has shown that the entire superstructure is a mass of caved-in wreckage. The interior partitions of the upper decks have collapsed all through the ship, and the interior of the upper decks have collapsed all through the ship, and the interior of the steel hull is filled with a tangled mass of piping, fittings and broken artitions and floors.

To reach the treasure, it is necessary for the divers to clear a way cautiously through this jungle of blistered steel and iron, sometimes opening the road by means of hawsers attached to the Spray's winches overhead.
