HANDSOME BUILDING.

A LOOK AT THE REJUVENATED YOBK CHAMBERS.

What a Transformation the Builder's Art Uan Work—A Splendia Addition to the Architectural Beauty of Toronto Street.

A World reporter yesterday afternoon standing in front of Coate's auction room waiting for some of his aldermanic friends who are wont to make that locality their daily rendezvous, could not avoid as he looked up Toronto street, admiring the many really excellent specimens of architecture clustered within that little area. Year after year, ever since the construction of the postoffice at the head of the street, various improvements have been in progress there until now there is only building on the street which has not been either newly built or reconstructed within that period, so that to-day, flanked as it is with a series of magnificer flanked as it is with a series of magnificer t structures on either side, with the hand-some postoffice building as a fitting open to the whole, it is a street which, for architect-ural a tractiveness, Torontonians may show to visitors with no small degree of pride. This street, so centrally situated, is the favorite habitat of loan companies, insur-ance agents, brokers and lawyers, so that it is sometimes not inaptly called the Wall street of Toronto. The business transacted in that little street every day represents an in that little street every day represents an in that little street every day represents an enormous amount of money—greater, we believe, than many of those who are accustomed to pass up through the quiet r. vs of building here have any idea of. Quite a large fraction of the investment-esching capital of Ontario must be concen-trated there. rated there. While thus musing and looking up the

While thus musing and looking up the street, The World man's attention was at-tracted to the new building—we call it new, because it amounts almost to that—of the Scottish Ontario & Manitot a Land Co., gere-rally known as the York Chambers, at the corner of Court street; and, as The World is hence did to recornize any such evidences corner of Court street; and, as the work as always glad to recognize any such evidences of local enterprize in the c ty, the reporter re-solved to take a glance through the building. Looking at it, then, from the front, the building is a handsome stone structure, four storys bigb, with mansard roof, and with a lofty central tower, surmounted by a flygstaff and a smaller tower at each corner. A igstall and a smaller tower at each corner. Its frontage is 75 feet on Toronto street and 92 feet on Court street, with a one-etory extension of 19 feet additional on the latter street. The total height of the build-ing to the tower is 88 feet, so that it will seen that the ceilings are lofty on every

The main entrance is on Teronto street, The main entrance is on 10 roto street, directly under the main tower, though there is a second general entrance on Court street. Entering from Toronto street the visitor finds himself in a larg, hall, and anyone whoever saw the interior of the old York Chambers and books around him here will scarcely realize that this is the same place. Indeed, it is ty no means the same; for a complete transformation appears to have been made throughout the whole structure. The old building, previous to the alterations, was in a very dingy and dilapidated condition. As recon-structed, we do not know of any building
