BALL DRESSES IN ENGLAND. Very Low Bodices Now Considered Bad Form.

From the London Daily News.

Faint-hued satin is one of the ideal fabrics for the setting forth of woman's beauty. There is a sumptuous softness about it that fascinates the artist's eye and inspires the poet's pen. Its gleaming surface seems to irradiate the form it envelopes, and the shifting folds produce an effect of light and shade in which any less glossy material must fail. Nor is the mode of to-day calculated in any way to lessen the excellence of the fabric as adapted to ball dresses. The too abbreviated skirts ball dresses. The too abbreviated skirts are even how apparent.

On the whole, the evening dress of today, or rather to-night, is graceful and convenient, modest and becoming. An excellent instance of this may be found in a frock just designed by one of our leading court milliners. The materials are satin and lace. The former is in a shade of bright golden yellow, and is entirely covered by light draperies of brown Spanish lace. The edge of the skirt is fretted into ripples of shining golden yellow, just appearing beneath the filmy brown of the lace. The bodice and paniers are in a similar style, the latter consisting are in a similar style, the latter consisting solely of the lace, which is draped toward the back in graceful folds. Knots of yellow satin ribbon serve to bring out the veiled gold of the satin, while the folds of lace, where they fall together, form the contrasting deep tones of the composition.

Among the new fabrics for ball dresses is an English crape, snow-white in color, and dotted with pearls. The crinkled surface is effective over white satin. The pearls have affinities with the satin, while the crape presents opposite qualities. The three combined form a perfect union, free from monotony or any suspicion of insipidity. The satin is in a shade of fleshpink, and of incomparable softness of texture. Curving lines of yellowish lace describe a section of a circle on the skirt near ture. Curving lines of yellowish lace describe a section of a circle on the skirt near the front, and down the left side runs a panel of the satin, embroidered in many brilliant colors, softened by contiguity to each other. Lace of a similar tint is effective upon dresses of eau-de-Nil green; but by far the most beautiful trimmings of dresses for dances consist of the exquisitely made flowers and leaves that are turned out by the skilful fingers of the artificial Velvet leaves, in tints of warm crimson, golden brown and liveliest yellow look well upon almost any color. One, in corn color, has a long garland of bramble leaves in russet brown and red hung across the flounces which train the front of the skirt. The bodice is of plush in precisely the tint of crimson of some of the leaves. An evening dress of black net has the front breadth covered with a rich embroidery also of the tint of ripe corn, representing wheat in full ear. The black net is held back by ribbons of corn color.

A beautiful ball dress is in brocaded

gauze of the color known as imperial yellow, one so bright and glowing that one comprehends easily why the children of the Flowery land have called it "the daughter of light." The bodice is edged round the shoulders with large yellow beads. Papiers and decrease a glow pleasant to take; sure and effectual in debeads. Paniers and drapery are of yellow tulle, spotted with leaves of the same color. The dress, without presenting any loud or inharmonious feature, could not permit its wearer to be unseen or unno ticed in any ball room. It would need some grace of carriage and an air of dis-tinction in addition to beauty for any lady to appear in such a dress without becoming subservient to it. An insignificant woman must be extinguished by it. A shy one would be overwhelmed. Only a brilliant one would feel at ease in it.

"In what regiment, sire?" they improve the mechanical condition of the soil, and they absorb ammonia. you, captain." "In what regiment, sire?" instantly asked the ready-witted soldier. Napoleon, perceiving his mistake, answered, with a smile, "In my Guard, for I see you know how to be prompt." The new ly-made officer received his commission next morning. A somewhat similar aned dote is related of Marshall Souvoroff, who when receiving a despatch from the hand of a Russian sergeant who had greatly dis-tinguished himself on the Danube, at tempted to confuse the messenger by series of whimiscal questions, but foun him equal to the occasion. "How many fish are there in the sea?" asked Souvoroff "All that are not cought yet," was the answer. "How far is it to the moon?" "Two of your excellency's forced marches."
"What would you do if you saw your mer giving way in battle?" "I would tell then that there was a waggon load of whisky just beyond the enemy's line." Baffled at nts, the marshal ended with: "What is the difference between your colonel and myself?" "My colonel cannot make me a lieutenant, but your excellency has only to say the word." "I say it now then," answered Souvoroff; "and a right good officer you'll be."

Roman Ruins Found in Tunis. Paris Letter to the London Daily Telegraph Some remarkable ruins have been discovered in Tunis by Lieutenant Massenet, who has been dispatched on an archæological mission in the neighborhood of Bograra and El Kantara, in the Gulf of Gabes. The exact spot of the discovery is near Fabella and El Kantara, to the south of the island of Djerba, and it is believed, from the importance and extent of the ruins, that they form what was once the capital of the island, many years before the christian era. The sight is said to me most christian era. The sight is said to me most impressive. The remains of a great temple—from its form presumably dedicated to Zephyr—have been brought to light near the seashore. They are of marble, and of singular architectural richness, composed in rante of huge blocks. posed in parts of huge blocks measuring more than fifty square yards Immense columns of red and incur dyspepsia early. which made the dancer look as though her knees were in danger of coming through her dress. The length of the skirt is now regulated by the convenience of the dancer, not by the bearty or otherwise of the feet and ankles that a short dress displays and a long cae hides.

The rule is at present that the front and sides of the evening dress shall clear the floor by some two inches, while the back just rests upon it. In the gentle swing of the dance this portion also sways upward from the floor, and on a graceful valseuse (the waltz is now scarcely known by its former name, but has become the valse!) there is no more becoming length. The very low bodice of some seasons ago are now considered "bad form" (a quite untranslatable slang phrase), while the straps that essayed to do duty as sleeves would, if worn by a girl or young matron, at once condemn her as belonging to the fast contage, or rather to night.
