UNION WITH CANADA IS HER ONLY

HOPE. The Colony Has Ceased To Be Self-Supperting and Cannot Continue To Be Self-Governing-Annexation With the

U.S. Impossible, While Confederation of The Tribune at St. John's, Nfld., decries the idea of annexation with the United States, and believes it is impracticable even if the people were unani-mously in favor of it. In reality, howmous on that subject, and even if an overwhelming majority were in favor of annexation, they firmly believe that England would never permit one of her colonies to break loose and unite with another state; and that any movement in that direction would be promptly and sternly checked. The geographical position of this island forbids such a transferrence. As a naval station, it is without a rival in North America. The power that possesses it holds the key of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. To permit its occupation by a foreign power would be to destroy the safety of the rising Dominion of Canada, and to establish a standing menace close to her shores. No British statesman dare countenance such a step. Annexation therefore is far outside the range of practical politics and to agitate for it would be mere waste of time and strength.

"The manifest destiny" of Newfoundland is to unite with Canada.

The Island Bankrupt

Ine mannest estiny of Revisional land is to unite with Canada.

The Island Bankrupt.

The political situation at this date may be defined in a few words: Sir William Whiteway, with a strong Government, once more occupies the seat of authority. He has now to decide the destiny of the country. With a people impoverished by the recent financial convulsion, and a declining revenue, through the falling off of importations, caused by a diminution in the purchasing powen of the people, he is unable to find ways and means for carrying on the Government and paying interest on the large public debt which has been piled up. In other words, the colony has ceased to be self-supporting, and cannot continue to be self-governing.

Her Only Hope Is Union.
