

loosening patches of plaster here and there, and it became obvious to the most conservative member of the congregation that they must "arise and build."

church. Architecturally correct as to outline, though quite plain, its Gothic lines strike the eye very favourably. Built of stone, in a neighbourhood where that material is abundant and cheap,

No. 2.

After much planning and consultation, a structure was designed and resolved on, of which our second engraving is a fair and truthful representation. In outline, plan and cost, it has been regarded by many good judges as rather a model and yet admitting of construction in wood, it is believed that this plan may be imitated to advantage, in many localities. The stone-work is only rock-faced, with the exception of lintels, window sills, &c., while the main walls are of