

Roughing it in a Gold Country

Something less than a hundred miles from Cobalt in Northern Ontario is Porcupine, to which for two seasons there has been a great rush.

Looking towards the Land of Promise

A group of miners gazing across Porcupine Lake to where they hoped fortune awaited them in the gold-fields. Some of them have succeeded, but, as in all mining camps, any number have failed.

Ready for a Portage

It is often found necessary to employ "man-power" to get a canoe well laden with camp supplies through a marsh or overland to the next lake.
