

Asked if they approved, Canadians responded as follows:

strongly approve	:	9 per cent
somewhat approve	:	23 per cent
somewhat disapprove	:	24 per cent
strongly disapprove	:	35 per cent
don't know	:	8 per cent

Canadian Foreign Policy

A wide range of questions related to Canadian foreign policy were posed over the course of the past twelve months.

Canadians were surveyed a number of times on the issue of unarmed cruise missile tests being conducted in Canada. The Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security poll asked the following:

The Reagan Administration recently decided to exceed the limits for nuclear weapons as set out in the SALT II agreement. Given that Ottawa has allowed testing of cruise missiles in Canada on the understanding that the United States would continue to pursue arms reductions with the Soviet Union, should the Canadian government now refuse permission for further tests or not?

Over two-thirds of respondents, 68 per cent, believed that Canada should refuse further testing, while 32 per cent believed that further testing should be allowed.

On 20 January 1988 the Canadian Peace Alliance set up ballot boxes in 32 Canadian cities and towns to ask Canadians: "Do you agree that we should stop testing the cruise and start testing what we can do for world peace?" According to a Canadian Press article in the Ottawa Citizen, of the 8,655