Dear Sir Arthur Curie,

You may perhaps recollect exchanging some letters with me when I was at Queens. I should hardly venture to trouble you on so slight a connexion; but my colleague Mr. James Dickinson, who presents this note, is travelling round the world as Albert Kahn Fellow, and this is a semi-public office which perhaps justifies me in introducing him. He comes to Canada after visiting the chief countries of the East and South America with his wife, and I think that he should not pass through Montreal without seeing you.
