

Wm. Fleet Robertson (B.Sc.'80) was engaged in geological work for some years after graduating and then was appointed Provincial Mineralogist for British Columbia, succeeding Wm. A. Carlyle (B.Sc.'87). Mr. Robertson retired from this position in 1921 and was succeeded in turn by another McGill graduate, (B.Sc.'11).

Albert P. Low (B.Sc.'82) joined the staff of the Geological Survey of Canada and devoted many years to valuable exploratory and geological work for that body, culminating in his appointment as Director of the Survey (1906-1908) and Deputy Minister of Mines (1908-1910).

Henry Marc Ami (B.A.'82, M.A.'85, D.Sc.'07) became greatly interested in palaeontology and was for many years on the staff of the Geological Survey. In his later years he devoted his attention mainly to pre-history, and he was the founder and head of the Canadian School of Pre-history in France.

Alfred E. Barlow (B.A.'83, M.A.'89, D.Sc.'00) was for many years on the staff of the Geological Survey and later enjoyed considerable success as a consulting geologist. Another graduate of the same year was Donaldson B. Dowling (B.Sc.'83, M.Sc., D.Sc.'21) who devoted his life to work on the Geological Survey.

Wm. A. Carlyle (B.Sc.'87), already referred to, was appointed Provincial Mineralogist for British Columbia in 1897, being the first to hold that position. Walter F. Ferrier (B.Sc.'87), after some years on the staff of the Geological Survey, has practised as a consulting geologist and has also made a specialty of the study and collection of minerals.
