Tribute Paid to Memory Of Late Sir Chas. Moss

President Falconer in Convocation Hall Yesterday, Spoke of His Exceptional Qualities and the Important Part He Played in the Developement of the University.

At the regular Sunday morning ser-sice in Convocation Hall yesterday, here, and they were the source of much president Falconer took occasion to applies to him, not because of his pay a personal cribute to the late Chief own developed nature, but as he said Justice Sir Charles Moss, until lately once himself, they were such a help to pay a personal tributa to the late Chief Justice Sir Charles Moss, until lately vice-chancellor of Toronto University. In a short address preceding the service, the president spoke of the exceptional qualities of the man, and the important part he played in the life of the university and the state. Following his remarks the congregation, composed of over 1000 students, stood with bowed heads, while the organist played the Dead March in Saul.

"Sir Charles served this university with a devotion second only to that with which he served the state in his exalted position," said Dr. Falconer.

wearied sitting at Osgoode Hall, he would come up to the university, crossing the green sward fatigued with the duties that hung heavily upon him, listen to the diverse problems before the senate and graciously lend his mature judgment. In his passing Friday night he has left on the university the impress of a rich, strong character.

"No one in the profession of law is held in greater esteem that we know of at Toronto University. To know the late justice was to love him, for from him flowed kindness, sympathy and love. From the commencement he
