BOSTON BRAVES LAND COAST STAR

Give $50,000 and Two Pitchers to Get Jimmy Welsh.

HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 6.—The first of what President Christy Mathewson hopes will prove to be a series of advantageous trades for the Boston Braves was pulled off recently when, after conferences which have endured for the better part of two days, the Boston club secured a budding star from the Coast league at an approximate expenditure of $50,000.

The newcomer to the Boston ranks is James D. Welsh, star outfielder of the pennant winning Seattle team last season, and rated by many critics as the best ball player of the year out there in the Coast organization. That President-Manager Bancroft and the rest of the Boston board of strategy are convinced that they have secured a real find is evident from the fact that in addition to handing over a considerable amount in cash for Welsh they have sent pitchers Sterling Stryker and Jim Yeargin to the Coast and besides this have agreed to hand over another player or an additional sum of money to the Seattle club before the 28th of April next.

Three other Major League clubs have been after Welsh, yet the Braves finally managed to beat their rivals to it. The Seattle star's record is a most impressive one. Just 21 years of age, he has been but two seasons in professional ball, having been picked up by Seattle scouts in his home town of Oakland in the spring of 1923. Last year he batted for approximately .350 but he bettered this mark considerably this year, clouting the pill in 164 games for a total of 342, scoring 123 runs, and including 16 homers, 12 triples and 98 doubles in his accumulation of 205 base hits.

Fast as Lightning.

Welsh is said to be as fast as chain lightning, and Wade Kilmer, the manager who developed him said he is the smartest youngster he has ever drilled for fast company. In a team that has been remarkable for three seasons for its slowness, the speed of young Welsh is apt to be a tremendous asset. His

Making Service Certain

Winter driving seems to demand a hardier breed of car than the mellow journeys of summer and autumn. Country roads are heavy and city streets are slippery but the lure of the open on a crisp, crackling, brilliant winter day is irresistible and so—out you go.

And if it is a Ford that carries you comfortably along the frozen roads, you can go without a worry. Should some minor adjustment or replacement become necessary you know that there is a Ford service station at the very first place you come to; that you will get quick, courteous service there at little cost; that the interruption in your journey will be but a matter of minutes.

And when the major service operations become necessary as they do with every car, the Ford owner again enjoys the distinct advantage of having quick low-priced authorized service immediately at his command.

ting number three or number four, always in the clean-up position, he was a big factor in the Seattle club's pennant victory and Stryker, Yeargin and the other man whom the Braves will ultimately send there will have to make good in emphatic style in order to justify Welsh's transfer to Boston.

The fact that counted very heavily in Welsh's favor during the negotiations was his ability to play first base as well as the outfield. Welsh is a fine man in the outer garden, but Seattle club has a wealth of outfield material and this youngster would be sent to the first bag next season for Seattle had he remained with the club.

His purchase by Boston is significant in view of Judge Puch's statement that all the old veterans and stop gaps from other big league clubs are going to be passed up and that the Braves will be rebuilt by young blood before the 1925 season starts.

M'COY A FAVORITE AMONG THE WOMEN

Says Murder Victim was the Only One He Ever Loved.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 6.—(United Press)—There was that "something" about "Kid" McCoy which made him a favorite among the women. With no great culture or academic education, the former prize ring champion nevertheless possessed a fascination which led him to the marriage altar eight times, his conquests ending with the tragic death of Mrs. Teresa More—the only woman I ever loved.

In 1896, when 19 years of age, McCoy

Getting Gertie's Garter

A REMARKABLE FARCE COMEDY WHICH KEPT NEW YORK ROARING FOR TWELVE MONTHS

The combined abilities of America's two clever producers, "Avery Hopwood" who wrote "The Bat" and "Wilson Collinson" who is responsible for "Up in Mabel's Room" are discerned in this great comedy.

"Getting Gertie's Garter" is deliberately designed to make you howl with laughter, and it accomplishes its purpose. There is more fun crowded into it than in two average comedies. There is a pretty romance running through it, the sort of love story that everyone likes, but it is the exuberantly funny situations, the dialogue that fairly drips laughter, that makes the play one that audiences remember for weeks.

was married first to Lottie Pichler, in Middletown, Conn. They were divorced less than two years later, and within another two years he married Julia Woodruff.

The course of true love was anything but smooth for them, as they were divorced and remarried twice, the marital bark foundering finally when she eloped to China with another man. Not downhearted, McCoy in 1904 married Indiana Arnold of Providence, R. I., and in nine months was divorced, only to wed Lillian Ellis of Paris. This affair proved the most lasting of all, the couple living together for three years.

The "Kid's" seventh marriage occurred in Central America with Edna P. Valentine the bride. They were divorced a year later, in 1917.

For three years, McCoy dodged the altar, then took Dagmar Dahlgren, a Los Angeles dancer, for his eighth and last wife. They lived together for three days.

Another marriage, with Mrs. Jacqueline McDowell the bride, was announced in 1922, but the affair fell through when, after making a trip here from the east for the wedding, the bride-to-be found a letter from another woman in the "kid's" pocket.

JOHNSON WAS THE LEADING PITCHER

Tops the American League Moundsmen in Games Won and Lost.

Walter Johnson of the Senators, who received the trophy as the most valuable player to his team in the American League last season, not only had the highest percentage of victories among the league's regular pitchers, but he also led in effectiveness, allowing fewer runs per nine-inning, allowing fewer were revealed with the announcement of the official American League pitching averages for the past season. Johnson won 23 games and lost seven this year for a percentage of .767. His earned-run average was 2.72.

An odd feature of the averages is the fact that the first three pitchers ranked according to games won and lost are also the first three as regards effectiveness. Herb Pennock finished second to Johnson in both lists, while Baumgartner of the Athletics was third. Pennock won 21 games and lost 9 for an average of .700, and he had an earned-run average of 2.93. Baumgartner scored 19 victories and was charged with six defeats for a mark of .574, while he had an earned-run average of 2.88.

Johnson led in the number of batters struck out, having fanned 168. He showed his good control by giving but 77 bases on balls, but there were other pitchers who gave fewer passes per game.
