Ludlow Street Church

There were two sessions of the gathering in the Ludlow street church yesterday to consider the case of Rev. W. R. Robinson. The evening session did not adjourn till after 11 o'clock. After the meeting Rev. H. H. Nobles said that as a result of hearing the evidence, offered in the charge brought by Mrs. Maxwell, a resolution had been passed unanimously exonerating Mr. Robinson. He added that as it had been intimated that it was not convenient just then to go on with the hearing of other accusations, the council had been adjourned till the 25th inst.

It was stated by another minister present that though the resolution mentioned by Mr. Nobles had been passed, the verdict of the council had been "not proven."

CLEVER PRESENTATION

BY ST. JOHN AMATEURS

Production of the Servant in the House in St. Andrew's Church Was Very Successful

The Servant in the House received its initial production here in the school room of St. Andrew's church last night, at the hands of a capable cast of amateurs, who scored a grand success in their portrayal of this difficult bill. A capacity house greeted the performers, and everybody went away fully satisfied that they had seen one of the best amateur shows played in the city for some time.

The play is of a semi-religious order, and a very difficult one to produce, but all the performers gave good conceptions of the roles assigned to them. The play is in five acts, and is from the pen of Charles Rann Kennedy. The scenes are laid in a village in London, England. It was played with great success in New York and other cities, but this is the first time it has ever been attempted in these parts, either by professional or amateur companies.

Last night's production, however, was beyond criticism, and great praise is due to those who took part.

K-Take in lift, add Servant in House—Appreciation of the work of the two ladies in the cast found expression in the presentation of two handsome bouquets.

An excellent orchestra, with Mrs. W. H. Simon as pianist, furnished music.

As Mary, the niece of the whole-hearted vicar, Miss Marjorie Knox was very welcome as the innocent girl with the ideal of a noble and handsome father, and was equally as effective in the stronger parts when she first realized the failings of her parent and gradually saw the good shining through what appears to be a sinister exterior.

Mrs. Frances C. McCaskill, as auntie, the vicar's wife, successfully portrayed the designing wife who is prepared to make all sacrifices for her husband's advancement and is given up to admiration of her brother, the Lord Bishop of Lancashire.

Mrs. McCaskill showed that she had given every attention to details and she had no small part in the success of the performance.

As James Ponsonby Mackenzie, the worldly bishop, Frank Carr took advantage of the opportunities afforded by his character that most despicable of creatures, a canting cleric with one eye on the altar and the other on the purse, and discharged the important work assigned him very creditably.

J. L. Robertson, as Rev. William Smythe, the vicar, characterized the devoted pastor who follows strictly the tenets of his conscience and the moral effect of his fine acting was very strong.

The previous stage experience of Rupert E. Walker was very apparent in his admirable handling of the part of Robert Smith, the diamond in the rough, upon whom the play turns and who shows by his willingness to risk danger in removing the vaults underneath the church that his heart is true. The presence of Mr. Walker was a great strength to the little group who gave the play.

Fred C. Macneil, the bishop in disguise, as the servant in the house, furnished a genuine surprise, in depth of feeling and intimate conception displayed in handling this role and his work was the subject of marked comment.

Although appearing in a minor role, A. Gordon Kainnie, as Roger, the page boy, gave the part a very good impression, as associated with juvenile dialogue.

Altogether the play was a great success and if it were to be repeated this evening in a larger hall the attendance no doubt would be much greater. It will be repeated in the same hall and there is little doubt that standing room will be at a premium.

WAS SAILORS' BENEFACTOR

As the cables announced at the end of April three passed away in London, in his 89th year, Passmore Edwards, philanthropist and journalist, who gave away nearly all he had to benefit his fellowmen. Although he donated several two institutions, such as libraries, etc. His last great gift was the presentation of the Passmore Edwards Sailors' Palace to the British & Foreign Sailors' Society in London, for international headquarters, at a cost of $70,000, which he regarded as the most satisfactory deed of his whole life.

When our present King (then Prince of Wales), opened the palace in 1903, King Edward offered Mr. Edwards a knighthood, as did Queen Victoria before, but he did not feel that he could accept the honor. Had he sought honors, no doubt a peerage would have been his. No Cornishman and no Englishman of our day more deserved recognition from the crown.

One honor he should have appreciated, whether accepted or not, namely, the offer of the citizenship of London, but so high did feeling run during the Boer war, that the vote in the council went against him.

Six Sailors' Institutes on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada are associated with the great society, which has lost in Passmore Edwards a most generous helper, who ever regarded its work as an annex of international peace and good will.

His wife's charitable average 25c, 30c, 60c, and $1.20 box at Wasson's.

Natural feather quilts are seen in plaid and ombre colors. Foulards, taffetas and twilled silks stand well to the front.
