

BREATH CUT OFF BY RUBBER CEMENT

Watchman Meets a Strange Death While on Rounds.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 15.—Suffocation resulting from his throat and mouth being sealed with rubber cement is believed to have caused the death of Thomas Cripps, sixty, watchman in a down town building. An engineer in the building found Cripps lying on the floor of the boiler room, dead. Cripps was lying directly under the faucet of a barrel of rubber cement. The faucet was open, and the cement was pouring over Cripps' face and body. His lips were sealed tightly by the cement. The body was held fast to the floor by the cement, and it was some time before it could be extricated.

It is believed that Cripps either slipped and fell, or was taken ill and collapsed before being smothered by the cement, which was used in the manufacture of shoes by a concern in the building.

London, Feb. 15.—Cardinal Bartholomew MacCarr, Bishop of Verona, who fell and struck his head while celebrating mass on last Sunday, is dead, says an Exchange Telegraph despatch from Rome.

DO NEEDLEWORK TO HELP NERVES

Well Known Banker Says This Is Panacea for Tired Business Men.

London, Feb. 14.—Harry Lauter's song, "Singing Is the Thing to Make You Cheery," should be changed to "Sewing," says Henry Hoare, a well known banker here. He is a profound believer in the virtues of needlework as a pastime for business men and a relief for jaded nerves.

Mr. Hoare practices what he preaches and in his leisure hours is an ardent craftsman with the needle. His handiwork is of such artistic merit that an example of it is now on exhibition at the Royal Academy. He began by copying old tapestries and upholstery, then advancing to more original work.

Needlework, he says, employs the hands, rests the eyes, and at the same time leaves one free to enter into conversation, and is therefore the ideal relaxation for the business man. Already the banker has a number of converts among his friends. One of them is such an enthusiast that he has started a large wool-work map of his estate, in the Cromwellian style, with colors to represent the various crops.

Modern art, says Mr. Hoare, is a disease to be avoided by any one needing rest. He is looking forward to the time when needlework will become a manly art once more. Men, he says, are generally more expert and original at this work than women, and he dates the degeneration of needlework from the time the old male needle craftsmen died out and it became exclusively a feminine occupation.

MORNING NEWS OVER THE WIRES

From present indications Canada's capital will be supplemented within the next two or three years by the incoming of 4,000 Indian civil and military officials, who, retired from the service with an average capital of $20,000 each, intend settling in the Maritime Provinces. Transportation arrangements for the first 100 of these settlers and their families who are expected here in April are now being made.
