Crimean Veteran's

A Glasgow correspondent of the Evening Standard relates how a Crimean veteran, one of the Thin Red Line," managed to get to the renches in France, and actually, h his 82nd, year take h whot for wo at the enemy.

The old pensioner, whose name Deas, wrote some time age to the War Office asking permission to isit his son in the trenches, explaining that, as one of the "Thin Red Line," he desired to see for himself what trench warfare was, as compared with the trenches before Sebastopol. Though the War Office was unable to gratify his ambition, Deas was not demayed, and being acquainted with a doctor who was going to France, he persuaded the medico to take him with him as his servant. As Deas e still erect and hale the dostor nanaged to get him to France. Arrived there, he was given a look at his son in the trenches, and was also allowed, to quote his own language, to "smell powder once more and take several pot shots at the enemy."

Mrs. Maud Mercer, of this town made an effort recently to organize a Health Club. She had difficulty at first in securing a place to meet but the C. of E Academy was kindly loaned for that purpose. The public building was not in use on the particular night selected for the meeting, but the asual antique custem of writing to Judge Oke at Harbor Grace, and he in turn writing to the Justice Dept. at St. John's, and the Justice Dept writing Judge Oke again, and Judge Oke finally writing to Bay Roberts, had to be followed, and the idea of securing the building had to be abandoned, for no doubt week or more would have elapsed before permission would be grant-

But we notice that the women of Harbor Grace had no trouble in securing the Town Hall to hold their meeting in. Why the difference? Why should it be harder for the people of Bay Roberts to secure the use of a public building than it is for the people of Hr. Grace
