POOR COPY

BARTON'S WIFE.

We were seated on a bench overlooking the sea at Long Branch, Barton Wight, my betrothed husband, and I. Before us in the sand Minnie, his little girl, was playing and screaming with glee as she ran races with the waves. A wilful little child she was, but I had taken a great fancy to her, as every one did at the hotel, notwithstanding the frequent displays of temper.

'I know,' said Barton finally, noticing that my glances followed Minnie in her play, 'that you have no knowledge of my former married life. It is right and just, dear, that you should know. My wife,' he began, 'was a West Indian, very beautiful, and at the time I really loved her.

"For four years we lived together, but I can never describe to you my life. Zeo was jealous of everything—jealous of my profession, because it took me from her side—jealous of her own child if I caressed her too warmly. Her temper was ungovernable and the slightest opposition to her wishes would arouse a perfect storm of fury.

'And I discovered at last there was insanity in her blood.

'I tried to bear my cross patiently; my sister Lizzie came to me and took upon her young shoulders all household cares, and I engaged a woman for Zoe's constant attendance. In all her fierce moods, her most violent attacks of insanity, her love for me never wavered. It was touching to see how she would come to me, exhausted with raving, put her beautiful arms around my neck, lay her weary head upon my shoulder and sink to sleep while I soothed and caressed her.

'We left Minnie with Lizzie and made an extended Southern trip. The change was certainly beneficial. Zoe gained in health and was much more quiet. We were nearly at our journey's end when the steamer took fire in the night. We were asleep in the stateroom when the cry awoke us, and hurrying on our clothes we went on deck. It was a scene of indescribable confusion, and everyone was struggling for self-preservation.

'You may imagine my horror, Alice, when Zoe broke into the worst paroxysm of raving that had ever afflicted her. In vain I tried to calm her; she was wild with terror, and would not let me touch her.

"The fire was gaining in force and fury. In despair I caught Zoe in my arms and tried to make her understand that we must get to the lifeboats. She wrested herself from my grasp, ran swiftly across the deck of the steamer, and sprang into the water. I followed her. I could swim ashore if I could only find her. Alice my search was fruitless.

'I swam here and there, when suddenly I was struck by some wood from the burning vessel and remembered no more for two weeks. I awoke to consciousness then to find myself an inmate of a hospital in St. Louis. I had been very ill, delirious from the blow on my head, and to this hour I do not know how or by whom I was rescued. Zoe was lost.

"Now you know my story. Will you take Minnie to your heart?"

I promised to give the child my most loving care, and I knew he was glad he had confided his story to me.

One day we were riding with a gay party on the outskirts of the city. As we passed a handsome building one of the gentlemen proposed we should visit the lunatic asylum, as he was a warm friend of the doctor who had charge of it. Barton looked nervous, but assented with the rest to inspect it. Once inside, I found he took great interest in hearing about the patients.

'I have one subject,' said the doctor, 'that interests me deeply. She was placed here by Mrs. Weldon, a philanthropic lady. This poor woman was rescued from a burning steamer. We have never been able to find out even her name.'

'Let us see her,' I said to the doctor, I think we can tell you where to find her friends.'

'If you think so come by all means' he said, opening a door near us. I came to Barton's side, nerving myself as best I could.

'Hush!' he whispered hoarsely. 'Do not speak now. I cannot bear it.'

The doctor led us through a long corridor and opened the door of a small, neatly furnished room. Seated there in a listless attitude, her hands lying in her lap, her eyes bent on the ground, was a pale, beautiful woman. She did not stir as we entered, not even lifting her eyes. I glanced at Barton and read the death-warrant of my love in his face.

'Zoe!' he said in a low tone.

Never had I heard such a cry of rapture as sprang from the poor maniac's lips.

'Barton! I knew you would come, Barton! My love—my husband!'

I went softly from the room, from the house, and walked home. How I reached my room I never knew. How the night long passed I cannot write.

What terrible thoughts ran through my brain. But I knew I was only doing my duty when I saw Barton the next day and bade him return to his wife.

It was a year before I heard from him again. He wrote to say that Zoe was dead. Poor woman, she died without ever knowing that I had been loved by him.

I am Barton's wife now, and Minnie, far from being a care, is a light to our lives.

PARSONS' PILLS

These pills were a wonderful discovery. No others like them in the world. Will positively cure or relieve all manner of disease. The information around each box is worth ten times the cost of a box of pills. Find out about them, and you will always be thankful. One pill a dose. Parsons' Pills contain nothing harmful, are easy to take, and cause no inconvenience. One box will do more to purify the blood and cure chronic ill health than $5 worth of any other remedy yet discovered. If people could be made to realize the marvelous power of these pills, they would walk 100 miles to get a box if they could not be had without. Sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Illustrated pamphlet free, postpaid. Send for it; the information is very valuable. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House Street, BOSTON, MASS.
