ABOUT LAWSON.

Fakir or the chief exponent of fair finance; fool or the sanest man in America—whatever he is, certainly Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, is the most talked of man on the continent and the problem, "How much of a liar is Lawson?" is puzzling more brains than did "How old is Ann?" No man who speaks English is listened to by a bigger audience and no expulsive in the language has been left unused by those who have attempted to answer what he has said. And in spite of attacks and ridicule and denunciation there is no doubt that his audience is growing larger and more respectfully attentive all the time. While all who are in any way connected with the class Lawson is assailing with such picturesque energy freely characterize him as a clever and wholly unprincipled knave, an irresponsible freak and a prodigious liar, tendency among the common people—who are, naturally anti-capitalistic—is to place more faith in him and more credit in his statements. Certainly the reception accorded to him during his present western speech-making tour indicates a somewhat different public feeling from that which greeted his opening "Frenzied Finance" exposure.

The chief reason for this is undoubtedly that not one of all the astounding charges he made in those articles has been disproven. Though any one of them contained enough libel to bankrupt him and send him to jail if his assertions were false, not one action has been brought by any of the men whom he has charged, by name and in detail, with crimes of penitentiary calibre; not one accusation has been answered by anything except unsupported denials and torrents of "you're another." That he is "another" or that he was, is undoubtedly correct; but that does not disprove his charges, which if true certainly call for some such public uprising against the robbers as Lawson recommends.

It is very doubtful if Lawson's motives are as pure and unselfish as he paints them. He is, or at any rate was, as deep in the mire of "high finance" as any of those he is assailing. It is also a matter of history that in the notorious amalgamated copper deal in which Lawson joined with the "system" to please the public, he was himself rather shabbily treated by his associates. Thus an element of revenge, possibly the main motive, is introduced.

But what does that matter? The charges are the thing, not the motive that inspired them. Lawson may be as vile a thief as ever turned state's evidence for spite, but his evidence is so detailed and definite that it needs more than abuse of the witness to discredit it now.

Not only does Lawson profess to expose rotten financial conditions, but he offers a remedy. The basis of all the evil, he says, is stock inflation. The great millionaires and billionaires of the trusts, according to Lawson, have become such by investing stocks with a fictitious value on the market and selling them to the public. He suggests to the public that it now sell out these stocks while their fictitious value remains and unload them upon the infatuated. The result of a combined action of this sort on the part of the public, would be to let the hot air out of the inflation and bring finances down to a hard-pan basis.

The defendants claim that if this suggestion were generally adopted a world wide financial cataclysm would result which would bring ruin to thousands and distress to all. If this be true it will certainly bring ruin to those who hold these stocks of alleged fictitious value who are the men Lawson is aiming at, and who are also the men who have the power to hinder the people from this ruinous action by proving to them that their adviser is a fakir, and a liar and thief of the most unscrupulous and despicable type. For, if Lawson's story is untrue all must admit that he is as low a type of criminal as ever murdered a widow for her hoarded shillings, a man whose word and advice are worse than worthless. And if the story is untrue, those whom he has slandered and who claim to be in financial danger on his account should easily be able to prove it so.

Why don't they?

MORE HOPE FOR RUSSIA.

The news that Prince Svyatopolski-Mirsky may return to the Imperial cabinet is second only to M. Witte's re-appointment in its good import for Russia. During his brief term as minister of the interior, before he was crowded out by the reactionaries, Prince Mirsky accomplished many notable reforms, including the relaxation of the press censorship, and of police espionage, the loosening of Finland's chains and the gathering together of the Zemsky Sobors which first gave intelligent voice to the desire of the great mass of Russians for a more liberal system of government. He only left when convinced that the bureaucrats were so in control of the Czar that the reforms he desired were impossible, and would not think of returning unless he knew conditions were so changed that he would be more than a figurehead in office. With men like Witte and Mirsky at the helm the Russian ship of state may weather the storm after all, and the war and the bitter defeat which gave them their chance prove to that wretched nation a wonderful blessing.

The Ottawa Journal, independent in politics and usually well informed, nominates Major E. D. Sutherland, Mr. McDougall's chief assistant, as his successor in the auditor generalship. It believes him to be a strong as well as competent man, who would on the whole make a more efficient auditor-general than nineteen out of twenty members of parliament who could be named; and a far better and more forcible officer than ninety-nine out of an hundred public men who would accept the office.

VACATIONAL.

"Where are the 'fags' again?" said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"To take a rest, to take a rest," the City Feller said.
"What makes 'em look so hot, so hot?" said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"They're keepin' cool, they're keepin' cool," the City Feller said.
For they're goin' anywhere at all and just to get away.
To the mountain, river, inlet, lake, and they're hurrin' to get there, for they haven't long to stay.
For it's back again to town on Monday mornin'.

"What makes the rear-rank breathe so hard?" said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"It's pipin' hot, it's pipin' hot," the City Feller said.
"What makes 'em run away from town?" said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"Cause everybody does the same," the City Feller said.
They're runnin' from the city, they are after seaside sport.
They are goin' to a summer—ay, and to a last resort.
They'll work upon the links and they will sweat upon the court.
But they'll have to hustle back on Monday mornin'.

"What makes 'em work so hard, so hard?" said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"They're simply got to have a rest," the City Feller said.
"They'll need it when they strike the place," said Ninety-in-the-Shade.
"But 't'pose the rooms are all engaged," the City Feller said.
For it's "Hurry up." "Step lively, please," and punch your fellow-man.
To get a cooling 'lemo' or a nickel palm leaf fan;
And the guards of vacation is a smarting coat of tan.
And an empty purse and back on Monday mornin'.

SATURDAY SERMONETTE.

"TIPPING."

Giving small sums of money as gratuities for services given or prospective, generally called "tips," is a modern custom but is older than civilization.
The old cave dwellers gave tips or their equivalent to the wives as they tossed them a bone from which they had cleaned the most of the meat. And when the wives displeased their lords they were tipped without giving with the war club. Wives are still tipped in much the same way as the police court records bear witness.
Much has been said and written of the tyranny of tipping, and a few brave souls have rebelled against the custom, but as they were left alone, hunger and thirst and cold soon subdued them, and the rebels capitulated and meekly laid down their tips.
Much has been said and written of the tyranny of tipping, and a few brave souls have rebelled against the custom, but as they were left alone, hunger and thirst and cold soon subdued them, and the rebels capitulated and meekly laid down their tips.

Politicians are the most expert tipsters in the world—I hope the compositor will not make typists out of tipsters, for the word is not always synonymous—at least the successful ones are, and they are always at it, dropping tips in the form of kisses to babies and smiles and flattery to the mother, and promises to the voter. Merchants are tipsters and they can't make money without giving tips to their customers. A clerk that does not know how to tip pleasant smiles and kindly words will rob the store as effectually as if he robbed from the till.

Doctors are good tipsters or they get hung in little practice. We will get well unless they are old and rich, to be churlish and tell their patients the truth.
Good husbands and wives are good tipsters. He can't tell his wife that her biscuits are not as good as his mother's, and have a happy home. Also he must tip her with smiles, approval, a dress, a hat or an outing.
The wife has to do more tipping than nagging, or she will only hold, not have, a husband.

Clergymen and churches are expert tipsters or the clergyman is not popular, and the church does not grow. It matters but little about his pulpit ability; if his tipping ability is good, the parishioner frequent calls and he snores softly under your preaching and says you are the ablest preacher in town.

Why we should complain of giving money tips when we are giving and taking their equivalent all the time is a mystery.

Let Boots get his ten cents and Jeems his quarter. We will get well paid for it in careful attention and extra service. It pays to tip, it does not pay not to do it. The only class who do not give or take tips are newspaper men. Look at them and see how poor and miserable they are.

No. 4 Fire Company held its meeting last evening. Two resignations were received and accepted, that of Edward McLaughlin from the permanent force and Fred A. Coles from the substitute force. According to the advertisements which have been published in the St. John papers calling for tenders for work on the Central Railway, the plans and specifications for this work were to have been available for contractors on Thursday last. They are not yet ready. There are a number of contractors who have been waiting to see these plans, but from all that can be learned they will have to wait for some little time yet. The engineers say that it has been impossible to get the things ready so soon.

R. Macneil of Connecticut is at the Park. Mr. Macneil is pushing the sale of a new make of handuffs, and will endeavor to make the police department see their merits. Some members of the force to whom they were shown were greatly impressed with their superiority over the ones now in use here.

The advance party of the Y. M. C. A. campers, consisting of Donald MacLennan, William McIntyre, Arthur Everett and two cooks, left leave Indian today on the May Queen for Robertson's camp for the boys.

John R. Cummings has declined the appointment of inspector of concrete on the water works extension, which was made at the meeting of the water board on Thursday. He was at one time a candidate for the position, but is now busy with other engagements. William Perkins, whose name was also before the board, has likewise refused the appointment of the board. The position has been offered to Wm. S. McIlroy, who has accepted and will commence his duties on Monday.

During the past week E. Mahoney, of the water department has been doing the work.
