IN ANY TRIMMING, AND ANY FABRIC, THE BOWL HAT'S PRETTY

The small upturned bowl is pretty in any handsome fabric, straw or tiny blossoms entirely covering it. A sweeping algerette or soft quill, headed with a rosette or buckle, makes ample trimming. These are the most comfortable ve il hats imaginable.

A "CREATION," A CUSTOMER, A CONSCIENCE

(By Faulkner Stuart.)

Madam Rose was admiring her new gown. How the men would look at it while she posed as the descendant of Isis-worshippers; and the school girls, gazing or fearful, would stare without Marcel waves.

"Five dollars at least," said madam to herself. "Hiram has gone away with the widow who owns a farm in the bottoms, or he is making a fool of himself with a colt of a girl, who, perhaps, milks his cow."

"Be seated, poor woman. You are in deep trouble—I'm going to help you!" "Can you, actually?"

"Yes, indeed. Give me your left hand," with a tender gravity that would have done credit to a priest. "That hand has been at work for a good many years. It's a shame."

"An' him a church member?"

"Yes, but dear woman, he's a good fellow at heart." This would strike home for husband, father, son or brother.

"That's what I tell 'em; an' don't I know? Ain't he been mine for thirty years?"

"It's Hiram," thought Madam Rose. "And the other—she has more to attract him!"

"Yes, she's young, and to think!"

"Yes, she used to depend on you for—"

"For every day she had!"

"Well, it's a pity—how long have they been?" Madam knew just where to hesitate.

"Why, it's been about eleven days!" the big woman began wiping away the tears that just would come. "And Madam Rose couldn't you give me a lower powder to bring him back?"

"Yes—yes?" The pretty fakes hesitated for the first time in her career. Then she got up and frou-froued across the room, and disappeared behind the black curtains, the crying customer admiring every graceful step, as well as the new crepe gown and its silver fineries.

The trembling fringe gleamed on her upraised arm, and dazzled Madam Rose's eyes, as her fingers lingered on a bottle of capsules. A far-away look came into her keen, gray eyes, and it have some coffee—an' then I put the powder in—an' dear!—he stayed. Tug me on his lap like he hadn't since I was a bride."

"May I go home with you and board for awhile?" Madam Rose's hands lay wistfully on the big shoulders, and there was no color in the girl's face. "I'm going to quit this business!"

"Why, honey, would you come? We ain't got much, me an' husband, but an' you've done so much for us!"

Madam Rose refused to wear the black and silver gown even in the morning, and when she walked across the fields those summer days, her simple cotton dress caused not even the plowmen to look after her.

AMUSEMENTS.

BIG NEW PICTURE BILL AT NICKEL.

The end of the week will see some excellent picture attractions at the Nickel, pictures that will make the blood tingle with healthy excitement, pictures that will appeal to the heart, and enough comedy to effect the more serious emotions. "On The Warpath" is one of those magnificent Selig western films with real Indians, early settlers and the United States troops in spirited action, depicting the struggles of the pioneers against hostile hordes. "A Bird in a Gilded Cage" is a charming drama, and the leading feature, "A Telltale Blotter," is a clever detective photo-variety. The talking picture, "A Hoodoo Overcoat," will be equally as funny as the last item of this sort. "A Jealous Husband," Miss Edwards will sing her new song, "Fancies Bring Thoughts of You," and there will be a new collection of old St. John pictures before the fire of 77. On Saturday afternoon this week's prize-winners in the picture contest will be announced and the show will be an hour long.

On Monday the Nickel will introduce to its patrons The Silbers, a refined duo of operatic singers whose numbers will add exceptional dignity and merit to the already good programmes. Signor and Signora Silber have just concluded a highly successful and artistic engagement in the Halifax Nickel.

TWO STAR VAUDEVILLE ACTS.

Miss Lottie Blanchard, the dainty little comedienne at the Princess, contributes to make a big hit at every performance. Today Miss Blanchard will have several new songs. Louis Frizkow, the Cocco Boy, who sings his own original songs in their own original way, is making new friends at every performance. Today there is to be a complete change of pictures. Mr. Wat- erall is singing a pretty child song. Two Little Baby's Shoes, beautifully illustrated. To avoid rushes in the evening be early and if possible attend the matinee.

LITTLE YVONNE IS WILLING TO REMAIN

Magistrate Landry of Memramcook has received no reply as yet from the Salem authorities in the matter of the kidnapping of four year old Yvonne Bourke, and it is generally felt that further action to recover the child by process of law will not be undertaken. Yesterday the child, who on Monday last was stolen from the convent of the gray nuns, accompanied by her aunt, Ida Bourke, visited the village store. She explained to the proprietor her purpose in leaving New England and stated that she expected to remain in Bourque for two months at least. She states that, despite the efforts of the mother, Little Yvonne is not to be returned to the United States.

The couple is now quarantined at the home of Thlas A. Bourke. Little Yvonne is apparently happy and contented to remain away from the custody of the mother.
