Pleasures of Table.

Pleasures of the Table.

H. Ellwanger, suthor of "The Pleases of the Table," an account of gastromy, reminds us that Sardanapalus, last the Assyrian kings, offered a guerdon is a thousand pieces of gold to him who would produce a new dish. "Eat, drink, imuse thyself: all else is vanity," was it is maxim, and the precept he desired to have engraven on his tomb. It is recorded that Mark Antony, more than usually pleased with his dinner, sent for the cook and presented him with a city, of 35,000 inhabitants.

In England 400 or 500 years ago, people took four meals—breakfast at seven, dinner at ten, supper at four, and livery at eight. Since then, from an early hour in the morning the principal daily meal has advanced equally in France and England through every hour from ten in the foremon until ten at night. In France in the thirteenth century nine in the morning was the dinner-hour; Henry VIII. dimed at eleven. In Cromwell's time one o'clock had come to be the fashionable hour, and in Addison's day-two o'clock, which gradually became adjourned until four. Pope found fault with Lady Suffolk for dining so late as four, saying young people might become invered to such things, but as for himself, if she would adopt such unreasonable practices he must absent himself from Marble Hilh. Four and five continued to be the popular dining-hour among the better classes until the second decade of Marble Hill. Four and live continued to be the popular dining-hour among the better classes until the second decade of the century, when dinner was further postponed, from which period it has steadily continued to encroach upon the steadily continued to encroach upon the evening.

The clergy have been always bulwarks of good living. Ellwanger tells a story of a Franch wedding dinner at which the officiating pastor was present. After every course he raised his glass and exclaimed "My children, with this you must drink some wine." The turn of dessert sarriving, he repeated his injunction for the tenth time, again setting the example himself. "Pardon, Monsieur le Cure," one of the guests interrunted, "but with one of the guests interrupted, "but with what do you not drink wine?" "With water, my son!"

He was calling on a young lady and had been talking against time for severa. hours, not noticing that she was, to say the least, alightly wearled.

"Do you know," he said, after completing a monologue of several thousand words, and thinking a little flattery would be appreciated, "while talking tonight, I have felt as if I were inspired by one of the Mises. And which one do you think it is?"

He looked searchingly into her beautiful face. The modest blush for which he was watching proved to be a widty youn, which graw wider as she answered:

"I guess the Muse that inspires you to-night must be Euterpa."

He didn't really know anything about anythology, so he couldn't tell just what she meant. But when he got home he took down his encyclopaedia, and there in cold type, staring him in the face, he case."

The Love Cure.

The Love Cure.

The latest departure in medical treatment, according to an English exchange is "The Love Cure." It appears that certain sensitive natures—perhaps people who are afflicted with inordinate vanity, and they are many—wither through the unkindness they meet with in the world. The Love Cure is devised to remedy this. The patients are surrounded with trained nurses who pander to their vanity with assiduity. If the patient is a woman, they praise her beauty, her cleverness, her taste, they admire her character, and by every conceivable means restore her confidence in herself. Self-confidence is to the things of this world that which Faith is to those of the next; it will "move mountains." The principle upon which the system is based is correct, and, no doubt, many could be treated with considerable success.

Utopia

In time labor and capital grew into such accord that the workingmen lost no opportunity of showing their appreciation of the fidelity and steadiness of their employers.

As a mark of esteem, at the close of one year, the workingmen unanimously, reduced their own salaries.

At the close of the next year they gave a further manifestation of their understanding of the needs of the employing classes by agreeing to work on legal holidays and Sundays without pay.

Of course the natural eventuation eventuates.

Emboldened by the apparent departs.

Emboldened by the apparent dependence of the laboring element, the employers' union voted a universal strike.

After that the same old effect to being aprital and labor together was resumed.

Mrs. Jas. Kinsella Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Peculiar Medical Case Ends in An-other Victory for the Great Kid-ney Remedy.

St. Malachie, Dorchester Co., Que. St. Malachie, Dorchester Co., Que., Sept. 13.—(Special).—A medical case of particular interest, especially to women, is causing much talk here. Mrs. James Kinsella suffered from Kidney Disease, which so affected her that she could not sleep and she was obliged for two summers to pass her nights sitting in a chair. To-day she is practically a well woman. Interviewed regarding her cure she said—"I had a pain in my right hip, in the back and was swollen all down that side of the abdomen. I could not sleep at night and I was obliged to sit up in a chair for two sum-

"Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills I bought one box. That gave me such relief that I continued to use them. They did me a world of good and now I can go to bed like other people. I have never had to sit up in a chair since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Female complaints are caused by bad Kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure them.

Provost Daniel, the recently elected head of Worcester College, Oxford, says The London Sketch, some years ago when he was proctor of the institution made a swift retort to an undergraduate who had to pay an unwilling call upon him. "A fine morning, sir," remarked the undergraduate, wishing to establish genial relations.
"A five-shilling line morning agaraid," said Mr. Daniel.

ter, my son!"

Of Bignon's famous Parls restaurant Mr. Ellwanger revives these capital legends:

"Fifteen francs for a peach?" enquired Prince Narischkin, "they must be very scarce." "It isn't the peaches that are scarce, mon prince; it is the Narischkina." "Monsieur Bignon, a red herring at two and a half francs! It seems to me that is excessive." "But these prices are marked in your interest," rejoined the restaurateur. "It is the barrier I have established between my clients and the vulgar. Why do you come here! To be among yourselves, to avoid embarrassing or compromising surroundings. If I changed my prices the house would be invaded, and you would all leave."

Another patron who complained of a sauce was asked, "Did you dine here last evening?" "No." he replied. "That is the trouble, then; you spolled your taste in the other restaurant." Still another guest objected to the charges on his bill comparing it with an identical breakfast of a few days previous, which amounted to eighteen and a half francs, whereas the breakfast in question was charged twenty-one francs eighteen centimes. "I will investigate the mistake," said Bignon, who, with the two bills, proceeded to his desk, returning shortly afterwards "It is very true, monsieur, that a mistake was made in your favor last Monday; but I make no claim for restitution!"

Minard's Liniment - Lumberman's Friend. ---- The Day After.

Manifold are the songs that celebrate our holidays and anniversaries, plentiful are the pages filled with suitable selections and appropriate refrains commemorating this great day or that remarkable occasion. Lives there a holiday so humble that it has not its host of eulogists? Is there a memorable time that has escaped due recognition?

Yes, one—and that of such incalculable importance that it should stand preminent among red-letter days: a day the value of which none may ignore; the vast significance of which all must acknowledge; a day that plays a vital part in every life and makes or mars the history of every soul. It is a petty day of judgment. A day that tests our passions and tries our strength said patience, and teaches us the worth of all other red-letter days, none of which may dare rival this one in might and majesty.

It is a strange omission that the "Day After," supreme and epoch-msking period of time, should have failed to receive the homage which is its just prerogative.

The Day After the feast, we run slight risk of overrating its value. The Day After the ball, we can sit down to analyze our partners. The Day After the wedding begins a new regime, for better or for worse. The Day After the funeral the bereaved realize that the beloved one has departed.

Upon a summer day we shout the wondrous victory of Manila, but the Day After perchance we may deplore the burden of the Philippines.

What mean those two great words "success" and "defeat" save in the light of the Day After?

The angel with the flaming sword drives Adam and Eve from Paradise, and then begins the story of the world.

A climax is much oftener a beginning than an ending. We follow a series of great events up to that instant of triumph or despair, and then we end abruptly; such a conclusion is verily artistic!

Why Kipling Wouldn't Lecture

A very characteristic Kipling letter has

A very characteristic Kipling letter has again been brought into print by the death of Major Pond, the manager of celebrities. It seems that in 1895, while Mr. Kipling was living in Vermont, the major tried to get him to make a lecture tour of the country, offering compensation well proportioned to the author's celebrity, then at its height. Mr. Kipling evidently considered the proposition with some care, but only to reject it, for he wrote:

"There is such a thing as paying one hundred and twenty-five cents for a dollar, and, though I suppose there is money in the lecturing business, it seems to me that the bother, the fuss, the being at everybody's beck and call, the night journeys, and so on, make it very dear. I've seem a few men who've lived through the fight, but they did not look happy. I might do it as soon as I have two mortgages on my house, a lien on the horses, and a bill of sale on the furniture, and writer's cramp in both hands; but at present I'm busy and contented to go on with the regular writing business. You forget that I have already wandered over most of the States, and there inn't enough money in sight to hire me to face again some of the hotels and some of the railway systems that I have met with. America is a great country, but she is not made for lecturing in."

"The Best-laid Plans-

A story is being told in London about a man prominent in public life, whose name may not be mentioned, which illustrates the insecurity of human preparations. He was planning an entertainment, on an elaborate scale, to be given to various friends in the neighborhood of his country-seat. Unfortunately, his nearest neighbor, a close relative, is highly uncongenial to himself and his intimates, and he racked his brains to devise a scheme by which he might avoid timates, and he racked his brains to devise a scheme by which he might avoid the necessity of inviting the undesirable cousin to be among his guests.

"I have it!" he announced to his wife at breakfast on the morning of the event. "I'll send him some tickets for the play to-night in town. Of course he'll be delighted, as he seldom has an opportunity of going to the theater."

The tickets were accordingly sent, and the host, with an easy conscience, proceeded to enjoy the company of his friends. But his satisfaction was of short duration. At the height of the festivities in walked the objectionable neighbor.

restrictes in waited the opjectionarian neighbor.

"Such a stupid mistake you made," he announced, as he approached his cousing "as soon as I heard about your party I knew that you must have sent me the tickets for the wrong night, so I got them changed for to-morrow evening and came right over here as soon as I could."

Mr. Perkins—That's a pretty likely seokin' boy you have there, Sam.
Mr. Dobbs—He's good enough if he wasn't so all-fired slow; why, if that boy had a' had the job buildin' the ark we wouldn't a' had the flood yis.
