A United States architect expresses his ability to erect the highest 'sky-scraper' in the world. The structure would be 1,500 feet high—half as high again as the Eiffel Tower, and would contain 125 storeys, affording accommodation for 6,000 offices, and at least 30,000 people.

At the meeting of Glasgow Presbytery it was decided, on a motion by Dr. Marshall Lang, and by a large majority, to decline the petition of Rev. J. L. The Westminster Gazette says: "It has just become known that Rev. Dr. Walter C. Smith, who was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland in 1890—the Church's jubilee year—was at that time offered a baronetcy by Mr. Gladstone." Dr. Smith contradicts this statement. He writes: "There was a brief paragraph at the close of Mr. Gladstone's letter which I did not read to the Assembly for the simple reason that it was a purely personal and kindly reference to myself. I cannot now recall it, but it was one of several generous greetings which I had from the distinguished statesmen and which were highly appreciated by me and my family. My son took possession of them as heirlooms to be faithfully cherished, and I suppose has them with him now in Cairo. I cannot therefore quote the words now, but I can assure you there was no proposal of honouring me with anything more than a kindly recognition such as I have received from him more than once before. More than that I neither desire nor deserve."
