Rippling Rhymes

BAD DAYS.

The greatest poets had their days when they wrote pungent and painful lyrics. In vain their lyrics would't dig up rhymes. A Milton often walked the floor, and beat his head against the door, and tried his best to 'oot his lute which wouldn't answer, worth a hoot. But when a man is labeled a great, this thing will not hit his name abate. The worse he writes, the more the crowd will say how richly he's endowed; they'll take his halting, bad-day rhymes, and show just why it is sublime. When Browning had an evil day, he'd often write a crazy lay, that had no sense, and he'd confess that what it meant he couldn't guess. And Browning fans would organize, and try to look profound and wise, and wrestle with each dippy line, and call it noble and divine. Which filled the gifted Bob with mirth, while he was dwelling on this earth.

SYMPATHETIC STRIKE?

By Courier Leased Wire. Montreal, July 15.—Although a strike of the railway men who are members of the Federated Shoppers' Trade does not necessarily mean that there will be a sympathetic strike of all other members of those federated trades not in the railway's employ there is always a possibility that it might happen. J. T. Foster, president of the Trades and Labor Council to-day, "The local organizations have been holding meetings every night for the past week or so considering the matter and talking notes on it," he said. Foster also said the trades were closely interlocked and there was scarcely a classification of the railroad trade that would not be involved, carpenters, painters, machinists and so on down the line in case a strike was called.
