edroom she was preparing for him.

Neville nodded gravely, for of course had heard of the engagemrent. Trale told him of it.

"Took us all by surprise, it did, Sir Jordan being so much older than Miss Audrey, not that he looks his age. I suppose you've seen him. Master Ne-

"No." said Neville, and his tone caused

Mrs. Parsons to stop with a pillow case in her hand and look at him.

"Oh, dear, dear me; yes, I remember," she said. "Well, it isn't every one as can get on with Sir Jordan. He's a very great man now, Mr. Neville, and we don't see much of him. The last time he passed I went out, and gave him a courtsey, but I don't think he remember-ed me, as was very natural," she added, as if desirous of explaining that she was not complaining. "He wasn't my boy, you were, you know. Lor', how glad I am to see you. Now, if Miss Audrey was here we should be all complete, so to say. And you haven't seen her yet, Master Neville?"

"Not yet Mrs. Parsons." he said "and

"Not yet, Mrs. Parsons," he said. "And I wish to see no one, or be seen, just at present. You must let me be your nephew come home from sea, or some-thing of that kind, for a little while." The old lady nodded after a moment's "Whatever you say is to be shall be, Master Neville," she said, with the im-plicit obedience of an old servant. "I did have a nephew as went off to sea, but I'm afraid he's drowned. Oh, don't you be afraid. Master Neville: I can keep my lips shut, as Mr. Trale knows."

The tiny bedroom up under the thatched roof was as clean as a new pin and as sweet as lavender, and Neville slept soundly for the first time for many a night.

many a night.

In the morning he looked round the cottage and found a patch of what ought to have been garden, but was at present a weedy wilderness and he amused hima weedy wilderness and he amused him self during the day, much to the grief and horror of Mrs. Parsons, by digging it up and putting it into something like and norror of alls. Later the wide and in the evening, with his soft wide-awake well over his brows wandered about the place, every spot of which was rich in associations of his boyish

He spent an hour or two with Trale, at the inn, talking over old times, and this was the programme that followed day after day for nearly a week. If any one had asked him why he was dreaming away his time at Lynne he could not have told them, and every day he reminded himself that he must be off

His small stock of money was disap-pearing, if slowly, still surely, and he must go out into the world and get more-somehow.

"After all." he said to himself with a sigh, "I have seen the old place; it's very unlikely that once I've left it again I shall ever see it more. Why should I stay and make myself known to—to Jordan and Audrey? I should only become an object of charity and pity. No, I'll be off. There must be work for a manwith strong arms and a will to use them omewhere or other."

It was on Friday evening that he communed with himself after this fashion. and he was sauntering along the lane which led past the Grange to the Bur-

He stopped and looked through the gate at the corner of the house, which he could just see, and thought of Audrey

These were two women for whom he would willingly have laid down his lifeespecially now, when it seemed of very little use to him!—and he should in all probability never see them again.

"Dear little Syl!" he murmured. "I wonder where she is, and if she is happy. I wonder, too, whether she has forgotthe worder, too, whether she has forgot-ten me. They say that if you love a per-son ever so much you forget them when they're dead. I hope she hasn't quite forgotten me. I should like her to give a thought now and then to the old days at Lorn Hope. How happy we were out there in the wilds with old Meth and the "claim," and how pretty she used to look sitting there with that wonderful hair of hers falling into her eyes, as she sang like a nightingale, while I worked! Yes, we were very happy. I didn't know how I loved her then, not till we parted, never to meet again."

Something rose in his throat, and a mist gathered before his eyes, as he went

Perhaps we shall meet; who knows? be among her titled friends. and—and will never guess that the seedy-looking individual who'll be sure out of her way is her old Neville was perched.

Curious to see if his surmise was right-down failure, and its' enly fit and proper that I should be sponged out. One more night and then good-bye to Lyane. I'll work my way back to Australia and have another try at it, though God knows I haven't the hart of desire for the went round them, one by one, step-

Make Your Stomach Happy with

SHREDDED WHEAT

and fresh fruits. An ideal summer food,

CONTAINS MORE REAL NUTRIMENT THAN

1054 wholesome, nourishing and deliclous.

the gold now. All the heart died out of me when I lost Syl!" By the time he had arrived at this heerful conclusion he had reached the edge of the Burrows.

It was dusk, nearly dark, and the moon, what was left of it, had not risen yet. But the darkness and stillness of the night suited his humor and instead of turning back to the supper which Mrs. Parsons was preparing for him with her loving old hands, he passed on to

As he did so he heard a brisk step behind him, and Trale's voice. "Out for a stroll, Mr. Neville," he said, cheerily. Neville nodded.

"I am just going a little way, Trale," he said, trying to respond as cheerfully. "I wish I could go with you," said Trale, wistfully; "but I'm due at the station. I suppose you've heard that Sir Jordan is down at the Court, sir ""
"No." said Noville, with a little state.

Jordan is down at the Court, sir?"

"No," said Neville, with a little start,
"I've not heard it. When—""

"Well, it's not generally known," said Trale. He came down rather unexpectedly, and he's been ill and confined to the house. Id don't know whether—whether you'd like to see him."

Neville shook his head.

"No, Trale,' he answered. "I don't think I will."

think I will. "Come down to see about some altera tions in the Court, to brighten it up for his marriage with Miss Audrey," said Neville's face grew grim in the dark-

"I neard it's to be pretty soon. Well, I must ge going. Nothing I can do for you, Mr. Neville?" Neville shook his head, and held out his hand. "No, and thank you for all you have done," Trale," he said. "I'm off to-morrow."

"Oh, I hope not, sir!" exclaimed Trale.

"Yes. I'm off," repeated Neville, grmily. "I've seen the old place, and—well, I've found two friends at any rate," and he grasped the man's hand tightly. "Keep my visit a secret, Trale. Perhaps I'll come back some day, when " he smiled bravely-"I've made my

"You needn't wait till then, sir, fo one man to be glad to see you," said Trale, and as if ashamed of the emotion trembling in his voice, he hurried off. Neville walked on with his thrust in his pockets, and his head bent thoughtfully, and reached the clump of trees. He threw himself down at the oot of one of them, and, leaning his cack against the thick trunk, got out back against the thick trunk, got out his pipe and looked round musingly.

"If Syl and I had come back to England together, this is one of the places I'd have brought her to," he said to himself, "and we'd have picnicked here as we used to picnic out in the valley. She'd have been glad to come and see the places I'm fond of, I know. Dear little Syl—hallo!" he raised his hand and knocked something off and laughed.

"I'd clean forgotten the ants!" he said, "I'd clean forgotten the ants!" he said, and got up and brushed his clothes with his hands.

his hands.

The moon was just showing above the dark hill line, and he felt loth to go; it seemed so very unlikely that he should ever see Lynne Burrows again!

He glauced up at the tree. It was ar old oak with a gnarled trunk, seamed with great hollows and stretching specious branches out toward its fellows. "It's a long time since I climbed you, old chap," he said, addressing the tree affectionately.

The last time he had done so he had dragged Audrey after him, and they had sat upon the very branch he was now locking at.

It looked inviting, and after a moment's hesitation he knocked out the ment's nestation he another out the contents of his pipe and climbed up and made himselt comfortable.

He refilled his pipe, but could not find his matchbox, and, thinking that he had according to the property when had dropped it out of his pocket when he scrambled to his feet off the ante nest, he was going to descend when he he remained quiet.

Whoever it was, he was coming straight for the clump, and Neville caught himself wondering what business a mar could have in Lynne Burrows at that time of night. "Some paor devil of a tramp hunting up a night's lodging, I suppose," he muttered. "I shall frighten him out of it's life," and he put his hand on the branch to bring himself down, when a figure dimby seen in the dusky darkness entered the circle of trees and stopped about a dozen yards from that ou which

Sold by All Grocers

ped outside the ring, and seemed to Neville, to be tooking about cautiously.

"A tramp!" he said. "I'll wait and see what he will do. If he takes to Mother Earth for a bed, the ants will make it lively for him. I don't wish him any harm, but I should rather enjoy seeing him jump up."

The man came back to where he had first stood, struck a match and lit a small piece of candle.

This rather startled Nevile.

"Tramps don't usually care much about a light to go to bed by," he thought, and he looked down at the man curiously.

He had not much of the appearance of the common tramp, but was, in leed, rather well dressed in a plain suit of black, and looked to Neville, who had black, and looked to Neville, who had seen many and divers types of mankind, like a respectable clerk, say a solicitor's. He was an elderly man with a gray ceard that gave him rather a venerable look, and Neville was puzzing at the problem why a respectable clerk of his time of life should think fit to come to Lynne Burrows and light a candle, when the man gave him another surprise by unbuttoning his frock coat and tak-ing from under it a small hand trowel. Neville could scarcely refrain from laughter. If this had been Aus-Neville could scarcely refrain from laughter. If this had been Australia, and, say, a digger's camp, a performance of this kind would not have been astonishing for all sorts of curious things occur in such places; but this was England, Lynne Burrows, and—what on earth could a man of this kind want at this hour of night with a piece of candle and a hand apade?

Then it flashed upon him. This individual was one of those harmless lunatics who amuse themselves by moth and insect hunting. That was it. The man was a naturalist in search of some "are insect hunting. That was it. The man was a naturalist in search of some respecimen of the flying or crawling the, and was going to dig or scratch for it.

To plump down upon him, or even speak, would in all probability give the poor old fellow a fit, Neville thought, and he decided to remain where he was until the man had finished his search and gone.

The man stuck the candle on the ground by the simple method of pouring some grease from it and standing the candle in it; then, with his back to Nev-ille, paced slowly from the tree, counting as he went.

He made the measurement twice as if o be certain of his accuracy, then went down on his knees and began to dig quickly.

Every now and then he paused and ooked round and listened, and once as he did so a bird, wakened by the noise and the light, flew out of the trees; the man extinguished the candle in an instant, as if frightened, and Neville could n breathing hard as he and listened. Then he relit the candle and fell to digging again.

Neville wondered what it could be the nan was in search of, and ransacked his prain trying to think of some insect or animal tha hid itself under the solid earth, but did not succeed.

Suddenly the man uttered a low, suppressed cry of satisfaction, as if he had ound what he had been looking for. Consumed by curiosity, Neville stretch d himself along the branch, and leaned over at the imminent risk of tumbling down, and saw what the curious anima

CHAPTER XXVI

What Neville saw as he leaned down from the branch was a round tin canister, such as cocoa or coffee is packed in, lying at the bottom of the hole which the old man had dug.

The man took up the box, forced open the lid and drew out—not a bag of gold or a string of iewels—but a roll of or a string of jewels—but a roll of paper. This he placed carefully in his breast pocket; then flinging the empty can into the hole, he filed in the dirt, stamped it down and strewed some of the dead leaves and twigs over the spot. Then he sat down, lit a pipe and smoked meditatively. After a few minutes he, with a shake of the head, drew the paper from his pocket and looked

As his eyes approached Nev.lle's hiding-place Neville quietly and caution drew himself up to a higher branch and so escaped detection.

The man went up to the tree and carefully placed the paper inside one of the hollows, thrusting in his hand to see how ws, thrusting in his hand to see how deep the hole went.

The paper was thus well within Neville's reach if he stretched out his arm.

The old gentleman then returned to his seat at the foot of another tree and nest, he was going heard a footstep.

Some one was coming toward him. He could not see who it was for the leaves and branches before him, but he leaves and branches before him, but he thought it must be Trale, and was going to call out, when it occurred to him that to call out, when it occurred to him that had better wait and make sure, and had better wait and make sure, and coming to call out, when it occurred to him that he to call out the head of the call out that he to call out the head of th ear to the ground.

This action startled Neville as much as anything the man had done, for it reminded him of his digger days, and the way in which the scouts of a party listened for the approach of footsteps. How did it happen that a respectable, elderly clerk should know a trick of the backwoods? woods?

The man got up, resumed his seat and relit his pipe with an evident air of satisfaction, and a few minutes afterward and descend when a tall figure entered the thicket, and Neville recognized with amazement his brother Jordan! Jordan had got on a dress Inverness, with the collar turned up, but Neville knew him in a moment.

Could it be possible that his brother, the Right Hon. Sir Jordan Lynee, had come to Lynne Burrows to meet this man with the piece of candle and the tin canister? It seemed incredible,

The whole business wore a grotesque and unreal air which almost made Neville doubt the evidence of his own senses. That his brother desired to escape obfrom the way in which he looked round him—very much as the elderly man had looked—before he entered the circle of trees, and the fashion in which he kept the high collar of his dress cape coat round his face.

It was like the scene of a melodrams Neville thought, as he stared down at his brother pale face and tall thin form. Jordan made his way to the other man, who remained seated, puffing his pipe, eyeing Jordan coolly, and Jordan in a tone of impatience and beauty

"You are here. Let us get this busi-insolent grin.

"What are you afraid of, Sir Jordan?"
he retorted. "We're quiet enough here."
At the sound of his voice Neville's heart leaped, and the blood rushed to his head. Was he mad or dreaming, or was that lavarick's voice?

He shook and trembled so violently under the emotion aroused by the man's voice that he almost fell from the branch, and he had to set his teeth firmly to keen himself from crying out.

keep himself from crying out.

Lavarick here, and in collusion with Jordan! Surely he, Neville, must be dreaming! His heart beat so fast and furiously that it made a singing in his ears so that he could scarcely hear the voices of the two men below him, near voices of the two men below nim, hear as they were.

"I am here, very reluctantly," said Jordan, haughtily. "And I am desirous of completing this business and returning as soon as possible."

"Right," said Lavarick, curtly. "Did you on the way do you.

any one see you on the way, do you think, Sir Jordan?" "I think not," replied Jordan.

"I think not," replied Jordan. "But some person, some tramp, may come upon us at any moment, and..."

"You'd rather not be seen holding confaib with a stranger at this time of night, eh?" said Lavarick, as coolly as before. "Well, I dare say you're right. It would look singular, wouldn't it, if you were seen? People would begin to ask themselves queer questions. But, there, you'd have some explanation cut and dried for 'em, wouldn't you? You can't put the Right Hon. Sir Jordan Lynne in a hole easily," and he laughed. If Neville had entertained any doubt as to the identity of the man it would

If Neville had entertained any doubt as to the identity of the man it would have been dispelled by the laugh.

It was the laugh he had heard in the tent on the night he had ransomed Sylvia, the laugh that had rung in his ears as he saw he borne away across Lavarick's saddle. And the sound of it now filled him with almost irresistible desire to spring upon the scoundrel and knock the life out of him. But he restrained himself with an awful effort strained himself with an awful effort that caused him to break out into a fit of perspiration. That there was some villainy hatching between these two was evident, and if he could only learn its nature he might be able to thwart them.

"It is your nature to be insolent," said Jordan. "When you have finished you will be good enough to proceed to the matter which brings me here. As I said, I came reluctantly, and it will not require much provocation to induce me t Lavarick rose and emptied his pine "You've got the notes?" he said.

"I have the notes," replied Jordan Lavarick held out his claw-like hand. "Pass them over, then," he said, curtly. Jordan sneered. "Excuse me," he said.. "I brought hem for an exchange, not a gift."

Lavarick swore. "We don't trust each other much." he aid, sarcastically.

Jordan remained silent.

"What's to prevent me from knocking you on the head and helping myself to the notes?" said Lavarick, with engaging frankness.

"A regard for your own safety," re-plied Jordan, calmly. "Before I left the court I told my servant that I was going for a walk on the Burrows, and going for a walk on the Burrows, and that if I did not return in an hour he was to drive here for me. If you murwered me as I have no doubt you would like to do—"ssented Lavarick, with cold-blooded candor.

"You could not conceal the evidences of your crime and escape in time." He looked at his watch as he spoke. "As it is, the time is passing rapidly, and my "You refuse to give me the notes first?" said Lavarick. "Absolutely!" retorted Jordan.

(To be continued.)

The New York American of Dec. 18th, 1907, says the common house fly is one of the greatest enemies of man. It is solemn scientifically ascertained fact that he is one of the worst disseminators of disease known, far surpassing the mosquito in this respect. Wilson's Fly Pads will kill many times more flie than any other article.

MOTHER FOX'S CUNNING.

Her Ineffectual Plans to Divert Hunter's Attention From Her Den.

Hunters found a den of foxes in the hills south of Hagerstown and unearthe five little ones about as large as well grown cats. The mother fox escaped be fore the hunters reached the den, which was lined thickly with soft grasses and feathers. Instead of running away she kept within sight while the hunters worked with their shovels.

She apparently understood what they were doing, for she endeavored by every means to attract them away from their work and toward herself. She approach ed quite near and acted as if lame and distressed. She would lie down on her distressed. She would be down on her side and writhe along the ground, uttering whines and moans. Then she would limp off as if very lame, going very slowly and halting frequently.

The hunters were not to be drawn away from the work in hand by such factics and finally, after much digging, came upon the den where the five pretty little fellows were shrinking. They made no resistance, and seemed rather to like the handling and petting they received.

'All of them were taken to a farmhouse where they are confined. They will not be released, but will probably be pain-lessly despatched. Grown foxes do not make good neighbors in farming community. Hunter say it is very received. munities. Hunters say it is very rare for mother foxes to leave all their young in one place. It is their cunning habit to scatter the family, one and two in widely separated retreats. It is said too that foxes will not rob roosts close to their dens, but will go miles away for food and carefully hide their trails.— Hagerstown correspondence Indianapo

Often the Case.

Ruggles-What horse-power is your automobile? Ramage—Two, I guess. That's the horse-power it took to haul it to the repair shop when it broke down on a country road the other day.—Chicago Trib-

Many a true word is spoken by acci-

That firm, crisp quality and That firm, crisp quality and delicious flavor is what you get when you insist on Libby's Mixed Pickles at your dealers.

They are always the finest and never disappoint. It's the same with Libby's Sweet Gherkins and Sweet Midgets. Ask for them.

Libby's Olives

The cultivation of centuries marks the olive groves of Spain as the world's best.

Libby's Olives are imported from the oldest and most famous of these groves. The result is a rare product, delightfully appetizing. Try one bottle and you'll buy more and never be without

Libby's Preserves

Pure, ripe fruit and pure sugar in equal parts, cooked just right and timed to the second, in Libby's Great White Kitchen, is the secret of the extreme superiority of Libby's Preserves. There's none as good at any price. Grocers and delicatessen stores

THE DOMESTIC FLY.

Timely Facts and Speculation Concern ing an Interesting Creature,

"The common domestic fly," said nan who is no scholar but has managed to pick up many interesting facts, "is altogether too common and too domes tic. She is one of the most interesting animals_"

"You don't mean 'animals,' " a listen broke in; "a fly is not an animal." "Then she must be a vegetable or mineral," said the first speaker. "Call her which ever you prease, but she is one of the most interesting creatures ex ant.

"An industrious female fly lays about 3,000,000 eggs. There are no indolent flies and few males. The fly does not set after laying; if she did she would be retired from her wonted activity during longer or shorter periods or incubation. Her eggs hatch without motherly attention, and it is seldom that one fails to "The fly has so many eyes," the man who is no scholar went on, "that she can see in all directions at once without turning her head or rolling her eyes. That's why it is so hard to hit her. A fly time poet sang:

Now doth the little busy fly Buzz in a fellow's hair, But try to smite her hip and thigh And, lo! she isn't there.

"The intelligence of flies is an interesting and exasperating study. One of the ordinary ways of trying to kill flies is to fold a newspaper in the shape of flat pad and whack at them with it when they are sitting still.

"Now, the fly is familiar with the scientific fact that if she sits perfectly still the descending paper will make an air cushion in front of it that ninetynine times out of a hundred will pro tect her from being crushed. The concussion momentarily stuns her and she falls to the floor apparently dead, but in a few minutes she has recoverd and is again on the job. "That's why when you strike at a fly hard enough to spatter the butter all over the walls she is able to reappear so quickly on the rim of the sugar bowl, "When out not for food but merely for the fun of tantalizing you the fly knows when she has had enough. The she sits down on a dark spot in the car-she sits down on a dark spot in the car-pet and watches you prance around the room looking for her on the walls.

"A very good way to catch flies is to distribute fly paper and platters of poi-son the tables and window sills. No mat-ter how thick the flies are where this is done, their number will be quickly reduced. You can easily prove this by counting the flies you have caught. It is a great comfort, when there are a few million flies in the air and more coming, to count up your catch and know that a dozen or so will never pester you any

"This method of getting rid of flies is often employed in restaurants. It was the method used in the railroad restaurant where a passenger hurried in for refreshment, glanced along the display of pies and said:

"Give me a piece of this huckleberry."

"That ain't huckleberry,' said the waiter girl, waving her hand over the pie; 'it's custard.'

"Up with the lark' is a poetical expression for early rising. In with the

"Up with the lark' is a poetical expression for early rising. 'Up with the fly' would be stronger if less poetic. The lark doesn't compel you to get up, but the fly does. Besides, the lark is an English bird, but the fly is a bird that knows no nationality. If the fly would go away and let you sleep till the lark gets up you would have less cause for complaint.

"When we warm children was ween.

"When we were children we were taught to believe that fly's foot was a wonderful part of creation—that when it was placed flat upon the ceiling the weight of the fly pulled it away in the centre and made a tiny vacuum and that the pressure of the atmosphere around it, in accordance with a law of nature, held the fly from falling. Several human flies' broke their necks trying to do the same trick with artificial flies' feet before it was discovered that if flies kept their feet clean they couldn't walk on ceilings.

"Flies believe that mankind was created for their amusement, and it has always, been a question with me which gave a fly the more solid enjoyment—to buzz around your nose and make you get up a few hours earlier in the morning than you want to, or to pester you in the daytime until you rage around the room with as paper slapper in your head while she wetches you freen which the room with a paper slapper in your hand while she watches you from behind

LONDON CLUBS

They Are Peculiarly Social-the Old Ones, That Is.

As everybody knows, our oldest clubs were developed out of the original coffee houses nearly two centuries ago, and the newer clubs, as they were formed from time to time, consisted in the first instance of many members, experienced in the older, and so the good tradition was kept up. This applies at least to the really social clubs, like White's or the Garrick. It does not apply in the same degree to the large, ceremonious, more stately clubs like the United University or the Oxford and Cambridge, where a member probably knows only a small proportion of his fellow-members, or to an eminent political club like the Carlton, where a man is elected for services to his party. And it does not apply at all to those clubs which are merely large proprietary concerns for convenience, and which are generally and very rudely known as "pot houses"—I had better not give instances—where admission is swift and easy and where the membership largely consists of very young men who have not had time to get into a better institution. But a really social club even though new has the advantage of old exemplars. fee houses nearly two centuries ago, tution. But a really social club even though new has the advantage of old exemplars.

Thus the Bachelors, a comparatively recent club, has a character very like that of White's, which is one of the very oldest. The tone of the really social club is that of an easy familiarity. A member going in for his luncheon or dinner drops naturally into a seat close to another member and starts a conversation. In the more ceremonious club, or in the "pot house," if he has not arranged to meet some one or invited a guest he probably eats solitary. In the latter sort men move in ellene and isolation; in the former there is a general hum of "Hullo! how are you?" and "When did you get back?" and "Seen Tommy lately?" and so forth—and incidentally it is difficult to write your letters or read your newspapers, undisturbed. These are the real clubs, as the English society of a hundred years ago, which was like a great family party, understeed them, and they are the hardest to imitate. The others may confer some assurance of position, like the Athenaeum, or confer nothing except more or less dublous comfort, like the—never mind, but they have not the essential quality and can be imitated anywhere, more or less.—Town the essential quality and can be imi-tated anywhere, more or less.—Town and Country.

SOLDIERS' UNEXPECTED ALLY.

How a Holy Man Came to the Rescue of Regiment. Sir D. C. Drury-Lowe, who recently died, a veteran of Orimea, the Mutiny, the Zulu and Egyptian wars, was one of the leaders of the forced march to Cairo which made its way for sixty-five miles across the desert and consummated the victory of Tel-el-Kebir. A curious incident is told of this campaign.

story illustrates the absolute and super-stitious devotion of the Arabs to their religion, Arabi Pasha had concentrated his forces near the English camp. The British soldiers were a queer looking set in their rough, loose jackets, dusty and muddy, 'their growing beards, their dirty belts and helmets; but the strictest discipline was maintained. The men were steady, cheerful, patient to endure the scanty food, filthy water and the heat and dust.

A canal ran close to their line of entrenchments, from which they got their water. Arabi dammed this canal and cut a deep drain by which he intended to let out the water into the valley and so make it impossible for the British to get their supply.

A few days before the final battle the British engineers were astonished to find the water in the canal rising. The ten-dency before had been a rapid decrease from consumption and evaporation. As every one knew the canal was dammed, they supposed the only solution of the mystery was that the rising of the Nile had filled the canal above the level of the dam and that the water was pouring over it. The increase was availed of at e; the lock was opened and the level of the water raised. The true solution of this increase of water never entered th European mind. Later it was dis-Arabi Pasha had cut the dam. covered. A dervish, or holy man, much venerated, had come to the camp. He had heard of the building of the dam and pronounced it contrary to the faith. He declared that although the British soldiers were infidel dogs they were still God's creatures and should not be made to suffer and that the divine blessing could be expected only if the water were set free.

Arabi was a devout Moslem, and he instantly complied with the dervish's decision.—From the Youth's Companion. The bones for those who come later-