Incidentally it is explained that the offices occupied by the late Master in Chancery are now in use for the

the trial of county cases and that the High Constable recently located his office therein and moved into the hallway the desks, book-cases, etc., which formerly found resting place within.

These impediments to the corridor were naturally, it is explained, a sore to the aesthetic eyes of the officials and their removal were clandestine-presented itself. The High Constable had wandered temporarily from his own fireside and left the door open.

Barrister Arnold came unsuspectingly up the stairway.

Detroit News.

Canada is not making much fus about it, but will be found better pr pared for self-defense, and if require ed by eventualities in the far east, for equipping a strong force for active service than is generally suppos ed. For some months information has been gathered, maps and plans completed, and measures of various kinds suggested by the experience secured during the South African campaign, quietly taken, with the view of prompt and efficient mobilization at any point on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts or anywhere else that events might dictate.

Everyone understands that any day might bring about a rumpus between Russia and Japan, or between the great powers, but few are aware of the practical use to which Canada in for Detroit. common probably with other dependencies of the empire has been putting the lesson of the Boer war.

One of the greatest obstacles the British encountered in dealing with the Boers was the want of local maps and information. The British were like the French at the time the latter declared war against Germany; the French had plenty of excellent maps of the enemy's country, but scarcely any ready for service, of their own. The British had more and their own. The British had more and far better maps of the Transvaal than of the territory under their own flag, invaded by the Boers. Until the military authorities in Canada seriously applied themselves. tary authorities in Canada seriously applied themselves to the study of cause and effect in South Africa, by the light of reports sent home by observant Canadian officers at the front, military maps of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the Dominion generally, were almost unknown.

This difficulty is now being remedied. Preparatory work of the kind outlined has been going on unobtrusively but effectively, and Canada has better facilities now for putting 16,000 or even 20,000 men in the field than she had for equipping 5,000 at the outbreak of the campaign in South Af-

RIFLE TRAINING. One of the first practical steps authorized in connection with rifle training as part and parcel of the national military system has just been taken by the militia department Plans were this week issued for the informamation of commanding officers in every military district in the country providing for effective modern ranges and targets. With the plans for measurements and instructions how to lay out, protect and maintain the how to lay out, protect and maintain the ranges efficiently and economically. The old iron targets are dispensed with, and canvas substituted. The government appears to have decided that 1,000 yards is the ly resolved upon.
Yesterday admirable opportunity for the consummation of the plans maximum length of range required under present conditions for rifle clubs. Longer ranges may be laid out if the land is to be had, and the conditions as to public safety had, and the conditions as to public safety are complied with, but the department does not desire them.

The greatest difficulty the military authorities in Canada have to contend with is the disposition of the mass of the supporters of the party in power to cut down the votes for the defensive forces. Government of the party in the below of taking the furniture into that office," quietly requested City Treasurer Fleming.
"Certainly," responded the obliging ments are not in the habit of taking the general public into their confidence on questions of national armaments, or dis-closing information which might be of value to the enemy. Ignorant of the necessities of the case, tax-payers invariably make difficulties over the militia votes if they show an increase over the preceding warning to the treasurer. He sud-denly deserted his task and fled down stairs, leaving the lawyer imprisontwelve months. This year, owing to the South African war, the field guns and rifles ordered in England, and other unusual expenditures the aggregate of the various militiary bills Canadians have to face is a heavier one than the country outer realized. Around the corridor bend sauntered worked up the county arm of the law can talk some. As Mr. Arnold was the only offender, albeit an imacent one, in sight be came in for the high constable's wrath. Had the lawyer heavier one than the country quite realized when the fighting blood was up.

HIDDEN IN A BUSTLE.

A despatch from Saginaw says — "The mysterious disappearance last fall of over $500 worth of money and jewelry belonging to Mrs. Martin V. B. Meredith has been cleared up. The property was laid away at the time of the death of Mr. Meredith, and it could not be found until a day or two and it could not be found until a day or two ago, when some boys playing in the yard at the residence, 1,907 Genesee avenue, where the Merediths lived at the time of his death, found an old bustle and, kicking it about the yard as a foot ball, the jewelry and $80 in money was discovered. It has been identified. Mrs. Meredith is in Detroit."

Thornton & Douglas, manufacturing retailers, Victoria Block. It is house for price and style "-

This is the best advice a man could get when he is thinking of his spring out-fit.

If one walks along King street one will find that all the windows are alike as far as the general get up goes. But the T. & D. window has a distinct individuality. Its artistic appearance, up-to-date styles, and enticing prices form the alluring web called attraction; and the longer you look the deeper you are entangled, until you find yourself pushing open the

The general air of business and prosperity strike you at once. The store is large, light, neat and the work of artistic fingers is as plainly seen on the walls and counters as in the window. In fact it equals the work a woman might do, Polished glass cases reveal the jewelry necessary to finish off a gentleman's appearance. Handsome cuff links, collar buttons, shirt studs and tie pins. Boxes of Gloves from dark to the most delicate shades are strong temptations. So are the hats, suits and that nobby top-coat that looks as though it were made for yourself, You stroll down the store, looking around, when you suddenly perceive a man walking toward you, evidently doing the same thing as your-self, admiring everything. Now if you are wise you had better stand still or you will have the embarrasing misfortune of walking into one of the big mirrors that glitter around the store. These swinging mirrors are the delight of the particular man's heart, when he is buying a new suit. It shows him his back, if each crease or seam is in its correct place. Now if some men were more careful about their backs, they would find it profitable. Just go and take a look at yours in one of Thornton & Douglas

The staff is courteous, and obliging, ready to show as well as sell their

Some one tells you that the low price of something surprised him. Now, really it was not the price, but the quality he got for that price that pleased and surprised.

The Thornton & Douglas store does this at an advantage because they are manufacturing retailers.

People will tell you that they never read the advertiseements in our daily papers-they are dry, dull statements, and nothing more. Well I suppose it depends upon your object in reading them. If you are looking for something to buy, and a knowledge of prices, perhaps these matter of fact advertisements are all right, but I think the firm's advertisements that start off with a straight forward statement of their methods and principles followed by announcements of what they have and what they will take is the more attractive form of putting goods before the public. The latter mode has been the Thornton & Douglas way of advertising. They are interested in the public, and they have the happy knack of making the public know it. "Cash and one price to Everyone," is their motto and method. It the foundation of all enterprising and prosperous firms. As far as suggestions for betterment are concerned, I will confess myself floored.

The old sages tell us that their is always room for improvement; but of this I am sure, that if Chatham's stores had to run a race, the post of perfection being the goal; the Thornton & Douglas establishment would reach the goal first, simply because it is nearest to it.
