CONTINUATION OF CALDWELL'S SPEECH

Here is more of one of the best speeches made in the House this year. Not only farmers but every person will find it profitable reading.

I have said that I was somewhat surprised and disappointed at different matters in the Budget Speech, but I was more surprised at a statement made by the mover of the amendment (Mr. Fielding) in his speech of May 18, more especially, as he has been looked upon for a long time as the father of the reciprocity agreement and an exponent of lower duties on manufactured articles, especially the instruments of production. On page 2582 of uncorrected Hansard, for May 18, he is reported as saying: "I had a call one day from a manufacturer who informed me that he had no complaint in regard to the tariff. He said he was satisfied with it, and as a matter of fact was doing fairly well in his business. Indeed, he said, he was contemplating an expansion of his business and he felt that in view of the large trade he was then doing, and the large business he was planning to do in the future, he could afford to sell to the ultimate consumer at a little lower price, and so he had scaled down the price of the article of importance in which he was dealing. I remarked that that was gratifying, but he said: 'Wait a moment, I want to show you a letter I have,' and thereupon he placed on my desk a letter written by an agent of an American manufacturer, the concern which is engaged in making in the United States a similar commodity to his and shipping it into Canada. This agent wrote to the man of whom I am speaking: 'Why do you cut the price? You can just as well not cut the price, and there is no reason why you should not. If you reduce your price you will have to reduce yours. We will deal with you on the same basis as we shall the more than that if you are going to start reducing prices we will meet you and keep on reducing, and no matter what price you name we will cut it for you.' After that was a very high up the question of dumping. Again, I suppose you might say that he was not right, let him send his goods in; let him come in; much the better. Well, if we could get a bond from these manufacturers in the United States that would compel them to send goods for ever at a sacrifice price, we might have been an excellent thing to have adopted the course suggested in this hypothetical quotation. We could afford to close our Canadian factories and any American goods if we could have got a bond from across the border guaranteeing us their goods for all time at a sacrifice price, and who imagines that the American had any intention of doing that? Indubitably; he avowed intention was to cut prices and sell at a sacrifice just long enough to close the other man's business. That was the clearest thing in the world, and my manufacturing friend visiting me asked me what he was to do.

Notice that he speaks of just this one thing.

I said to him: "What do you think of the situation yourself?" He replied: "Well, I suppose I have to go back to the old price or shut up shop," and I told him that I could not blame him; I said we would have to think the matter over. We did consider the matter, and the conclusion we came to was embodied in the dumping duty. We came to the conclusion that if the manufacturer concerned in the United States could come here and close up Canadian manufacturing interests it was right that there should be a special duty to meet that condition. I was considered by some as a piece of freak legislation, but I am glad to know that it has been copied in other countries, and the present Government have paid us the compliment of continuing it on the Statute Book.

In the first place, he says that a number of people consider this freak legislation. I think they do yet. I myself would not have felt flattered by having the legislation copied by the present Government, or by having anything in common with them at all.

What impressed me most about this statement of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was that if a call on him from one lone manufacturer, who had no complaint in regard to the tariff, had such an effect on him, an avowed low tariff advocate, as to cause him to enact a protective tariff to protect his one lone manufacturing friend, not from hardship, but from something he was afraid might happen to him, what would he do if he had not have done it the Canadian Manufacturers' Association had called on him en masse with some of the cook-and-bull stories they are able to put up with regard to the measure of the United States manufacturers? Does any hon. member of this House or any intelligent elector in this country believe that the United States manufacturers can manufacture goods or machinery any cheaper in the United States than can be done in Canada, or that the United States manufacturer is any fonder of cutting prices than his Canadian competitor? I heard my hon. friend who took his seat not long ago say, 'what good follows the British manufacturers were because they did not cut the price. That seems to be the one thing in common with all these manufacturers. In the above statement of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's you will see one writing to another: 'Why do you cut the price? You could just as easily get a bigger price.' And the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was willing to pass legislation to enable these men to get together and hold the price up. And still they talk of reducing the cost of living to the consumer! This hoggy in regard to the American manufacturer and price-cutting is trotted out time and again and made to do service by our protectionist friends, but I was surprised to find so old and shrewd a politician as the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's riding this hobby, and I would be inclined to think that he is riding for a fall with his own party when he rides that hobby. I should like to warn him that he will have a tendency to discredit his party's low-tariff professions throughout the country. I would also point out to him that there are a large number of electors in this country who are still of the opinion that the duties on the necessities of life should be lowered, if not entirely taken off, and certainly lowered on the implements of production.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that on a former occasion in the early days of this session I made my position fairly clear with regard to the present tariff, but even at the risk of being tedious I wish on this occasion to emphasize some of the remarks I made at that time. I wish especially to impress on this House and the country the fact that a tariff law that will enable an American manufacturer to establish a branch factory or assembling plant in Canada, bring in his raw material

BASE BALL IS GOOD CLEAN SPORT

Monday Evenings Game Best Ever Played in Hartland is Verdict

Without wishing to speak in any derogatory manner of any other games, The Observer and other spectators of the Perth-Hartland ball game on Monday evening agree that it was at once the snappiest and cleanest game that was ever played on the Hartland diamond. The Perth aggregation was made up of a number of bright and clean young men and their performance reflects credit on the up river town. The line-up follows:

Perth	Hartland
McPhail	Billing
C. Lewis	McKenzie
Dionne	Ward
H. Lewis	Keith
McCrea	Lavigne
Riddle	Hatfield
Merritt	Hovey
McLellan	G. Taylor
Westmore	Kyle

Following is the score:

Perth 00000310-3

Hartland 1000003x-4

Billing walked one and struck out

19; McPhail walked 2 and struck out

9.

Umpires: V. F. Noddin and C. D. Dixon.

In the game at Grand Falls on June 3 Hartland lost in a score of 10 to 7. McCluskey and Quigley comprised the Grand Falls battery. Billing and DeWitt the Hartland battery.

An interesting game was played at Florenceville on Monday evening, when the Woodstock High School team was defeated by the Florencevilles. Roscoe, who was Centreville's strong south paw last season, pitched the first half and W. Tompkins the second half. The Woodstock lads were defeated in a score of 19 to 4.

Tonight there will be a game with Woodstock senior team at Hartland.

On Monday Hartland plays at Florenceville, and on Tuesday at Woodstock.

New Pastors for Woodstock District

The N.B. and P.E.I. Conference of the Methodist church met at Sackville last week.

Ministers for the Woodstock district are as follows: Matthew E. Conron for Woodstock, replacing Rev. Samuel Howard who goes to Zion church, St. John; J. K. King to Hartland; T. Spence, Origo to Lindsay; Walter J. Donville to Dube; Hugh Millar to Centreville to replace J. B. Champion who goes to Newcastle. Other churches retain their former pastors: Harry Harrison at Jacksonville; F. A. Wightman at Florenceville; Charles Flemington at Andover. Argyle will have summer supply. Tobique and Canterbury will be vacant. Hereafter Hartland and Lindsay were one circuit, but hereafter they will be separate and Mr. King will have no other church than Hartland.

G.W.V.A. Memorial Service

Hartland Branch G. W. V. A. will have their annual memorial service on Sunday, at 3 p. m. in the United Baptist church. Rev. E. Bertram Hooper, the war chaplain of the Fighting 26th Battalion has consented to come and conduct the service. Every returned man should attend this service in memory of comrades who sleep in Flanders fields, or in the fields of France, or in a hero's grave wherever it be. Come in uniform if you possibly can; if not, come with your service button and parade from armory to church.

Parents and all friends, come and help honour the noble ones who gave themselves for us and for the great cause of liberty. The noble boys sleep, they passed the torch to us to carry high, and we give this day to them in loving memory of their sacrifice.

G. S. Barten
Sec. G.W.V.A., Hartland.

Claude Thistle, W. E. Thistle and J. Kilcollins of Bridgewater and David G. Thistle of Lowell; Mrs. Frank Bishop and three sons from Knoxford were on Sunday guests of T. B. Thistle.

On Sunday there will be Church of England service at Beaufort at 10:30, at Glasville 2:30, at Hartland 7:30.

The Shaw Comedy Company played in the Star Theatre three nights this week to fairly good houses and gave fairly good performances.
