They were here, he said, to see how large a vote can be got for prohibition in Bruce. They had 1,300 or 1,400 majority for the Scott Act, and he hoped it would be still greater for the plebiscite. MONTREAL, Nov. 15 .- Budgett Meaken

Montreal, Nov. 15.—Budgett Meaken, editor of the Tangier (Morocco) Times, who is in Montreal, says of the trouble between the Spaniards and Moors:

"His no wonder little or nothing is known abroad of the truth of affairs between the Spaniards and the Rit tribes on the Morocco coast, since the only communication between the Spaniards and the Rit tribes on the Morocco coast, since the only communication between the Spaniar settlement of Mililla and Europe is by their own private cable, which they have used to some purpose in presenting their story of affairs.

"The Sultan of Morocco, who is in no way responsible for the disturbance, is on the other side of the Atlas where it will be another fortnight before he hears by couriers on foot of what was telegraphed to this country a week ago.

"Spain is unquestionably the agressor in this matter, and has carefully chosen her opportunity for raising a hue and cry. I have visited Meilla and know the people concerned. Spain is bankrupt, her people are dissatisfied, and something had to be done to raise the wind.

"As England and France will forbid her from appropriating Moorish soil, she will have to be content with the return of a few million of her depreciated dollars now in circulation in Morocco."

His Brother Protests Against His Treatment by the Hospital Authorities.

Why Was He Sent to the Asylum fer

DELAWARE, Ont., Nov. 13, 1893.

My brother, John A. Mitcheil, was sent to the London General Hospital as a non-pay (pauper) patient about four weeks ago. This latter fact I was not aware of till Friday, Oct. 27, 1893. Up to this date I had every confidence in the hospital authorities, that my brother would get every care and attention which a sick and dying man should obtain, money or no money. On that date, the 27th ult., after visiting the hospital, I found that steps were being taken to send him to the Asylum for Insane, London East, I at once protested and did everything lawful to prevent his being removed there, My protest was made in the presence of B. A. Mitchell, Drs. Ballour and McDonald, on the following grounds:

1. He was not insane,
2. He was dying.
3. He was sensible.

In face of my protest and arguments, on Saturday, Oct. 28, 1893, during the evening, my brother was removed to the Asylum for Insane, where he died Oct. 31, and was buried Nov. 2, 1893, at Woodland. I will not touch on family and private matters, but come back to hospital affairs, and let the hard-working public—the masses—those for whom hospitals were intended, judge of the treatment meted out to my brother.

A Manufacturer's Views of the Importance of Lake Connection

o the Editor of the ADVERTISER:

To the Editor of the Free Press, City:

In your criticism of my letter in your columns of yesterday's date you say first that I was satisfied with the conditions of the former lease of the London and Port Stanley road; that I have not made complaints all these years; that while other citizons agitated and got the Michigan Central connection 1 held aloof and kept silence. In these assertions you are not correct. I was associated with other business men of the city for years endeavoring to promote the London Junction road. We were met as every point by the powerful opposition and influence of the Grand Trunk, opposing legislation and otherwise. At the time of the lease, I, with other business men, opposed it to the best of my ability, taking the view that I now hold, that it was in the interests of the Great Western to discovery progress of the Great Western to discovery countries of the Great Western to discovery and the state of the Great Western to discovery the columns of the countries of the Great Western to discovery the columns of the countries of the Great Western to discovery the columns of the columns of the columns of the Great Western to discovery the columns of To the Editor of the Free Press, City: the view that I now hold, that it was in the interests of the Great Western to discourage carriage of merchandise by water, Wholesale merchants and manufacturers held the view that if the Great Western got control of our local road is meant the closing of the Port Stanley harbor, giving them control of our carrying trade. This is what it was judged to mean, and is what it did mean. As a proof of its meaning I refer you to the closed harbor for nearly the whole period of its lease. It was judged not to be practicable to attempt to force and develop carriage of merchandise by the port, which was in direct hostility to the Great Western. The best legal minds held the same view. Wholesale merchants and manufacturers who support two-thirds of our entire population now hold the same views, believing that should the control of the road pass to the Grand Trunk, the port might as well be on the Pacific coast as at Port Stanley. interests of the Great Western to

While the Government is enlarging our canals for the protection of carriage on our inland waters, it is surprising to find eleading journal in a large inland city advocating the shutting us off from the advantages of navigation. You are given credit for too much intelligence not to understand this, not to understand that the Grand Trunk is in direct opposition to water carriage, and instead of encouraging competition, would in every respect discourage it, and doubtless end in reclosing the Port Stanley harbor.

You say that the oil interest was withed drawn through lack of enterprise in nob promoting a pipe line. I have always been led to suppose it was withdrawn for the lack of rates that local refiners now enjoy, after the horse is stolen, or through lack of competition over the Michigan Central if it had reached here at that time. The oil companies are still able to ship their refined oil past our doors east, and tar produced in refining oil, to this market. I should be sorry to charge the Grand Trunk officials with acting dishonorably. It is quite legitimate for railroad companies tod what would not be looked for in other corporations, to take from one community a larger carrying rate than from another, under changed conditions. The Grand Trunk cons, to take from one community a larger carrying rate than from another, under changed conditions. The Grand Trunk will cross the American border, and in competition with other roads and water, will carry merchandise of the same class for half the charge from this city. What bearing has this on our lake port? It does not take a man of much strength of brain to see. In our past position we could not give security to capital, nor could we induce capital from a distance to invest in an inland city, unprotected. The prospective development through the syndicate the past spring. I think gave stimulus to consider, able building and other employment, which we have full the benefit of through the summer. Let us be careful that we do not sink into a deeper ditch than we have yet crossed. London, Nov. 15, 1893.
