The closing day's sports of the London Rowing Club took place yesterday afternoon on the club's beautiful grounds, and the events were all keenly contested and very interesting. The threatening weather to some extent marred the enjoyment of the oceasion, but, despite this fact, a large number of people were present. The past year has been in many ways the most successful in the history of the club. While yesterday marked the official closing of the club, the boat house will be kept open as long as the weather continues favorable.

Dr. E. B. White, of East London, Succumbs to Typhoid Fever in Denver, Colorado.

Word was received in this city yesterday that Dr. E. B. White, of East London, had died in Denver, Col. Dr. White had been ill for some weeks with an attack of typhoid fever, having been stricken with the malady in Denver. He was removed to the hospital, where hopes had been entertained of his recovery until within a short period of his death.

Dr. White, who had resided for some time in Chatham, graduated from Toronto University when only 21 years of age, and subsequently practiced three years in Pittsburg, Pa. In 1898 he married Miss Sadie, youngest daughter of the late Andrew Weldon, of South London, and had since resided here for a year or two, living in East London. He was an ardent worker in the Methodist Church, having been superintendent of the Centennial Sunday school and active in the Epworth League before leaving. He left London several months ago, accompanied by his wife and mother-inp 7c vesterday in about that number of minutes; the other deals were easy. A perambulator takes up as much room as two men. Both bicycles and perambulators are positively dangerous in a crowd where sudden movements are liable to take place, as they are liable to be thrown down and trip people, who are thus in danger of being trampled upon. "In case of panic or accident the people should keep cool," continued the chief, "and let the police attend to the trouble. "Lastly," he said, "tell the people when they leave their homes to come down town to lock their houses up tight and not to leave any especial valuables lying loose. They should be careful, too, to display no jewelry in the crowd. A gang of thieves and pickpockets will probably be following the royal party, and the people will have to take every precaution against loss by their operations." The chief indorses the suggestions made in the mayor's proclamation to prevent overcrowding and confusion. All persons who contemplate witnessthe royal procession, especially those from out of town, should make it a point to be early on the scene, all probability it will be impossible to get through any of streets along the line of parade after 10 o'clock in the morning.
