BRIDGE-TOWN, APRIL 25, 1877.

RECIPROCIITY.

The United States Government are beginning to get their eyes open to the fact that they have a sister country a little to the north of the Great Republic, with which it is very desirable to enter into an amicable nature...

The Fisheries claims' commission will meet in Halifax in June, and we trust that their deliberations will settle the matter fully as to the claims of Canada against the United States under the Treaty of Washington.

Below we give an article from the "New York Evening Post" referring to the "Fisheries Claims," which is well worth perusal.

The negotiations with Canada for the fixing of a just estimate of the difference in value of the privileges exchanged by Canada and the United States under the Treaty of Washington, after dragging its heels since 1871 and undergoing delays for reasons so trivial as to be disgraceful to two business-like countries...

This branch of the question, though not so important as the other, strikes us as of good deal less importance than the opportunity which we have to settle these other claims by reciprocity with our sister country. The willingness of Canada to forego her just compensation, provided free intercourse can be opened, is in itself a concession of policy which she has of late pursued in all matters of trade and which shows in all matters of trade and which shows in all matters of trade...

NEW VOLUME.

With this issue of the Monitor we commence the fifth year of our existence, and in taking a retrospective view of the past, many seasons of trial and perplexity rise up before us, with here and there an oasis to brighten the landscape. When we thought the plant formerly used on the old "Free Press," it had been in wear over fourteen years and was only fit for rabbit-meat, consequently we had almost at the beginning of our career to purchase an entire new outfit of type and material, to put our paper on a par with those around us.

We intend to keep the prestige we have gained, and, if possible, make the Monitor more and more readable every year, hoping that the time is not far distant when we will present our readers with a much larger sheet, without increasing our subscription. Some forward friends and pay by so doing you will relieve us from debt, and enable us to head off all the enemies of the work of making the Monitor what we would like to have it—a complete index of all that is interesting to our readers in Annapolis County.

WILLIAM M. TWEED'S CONFESSIOIN. New York, April 17.—The World's Albany despatch reports that Tweed's confession has been delivered to the Attorney General's statement, preliminary to his application for release. It is long and exhaustive, giving a complete history of the affair, and is transferred to this column.

line, and the Thornycroft obliquely, so as to take the Bayonnaise in flank. The steaming went at 14 knots an hour, going at full speed in order to escape the "Thornycroft." The latter went at 19 knots. The "Bayonnaise" rate not attained by any vessel in the squadron. The chase lasted about an hour, the squadron keeping in the rear, so as to witness the operations. At the end of that time the distance between the Thornycroft and the Bayonnaise had sensibly diminished, and at a given moment the former, in order to come up with the latter at the requisite distance, had to slacken speed to 8 knots an hour.

The whole squadron watched this last phase of the struggle with breathless interest, and people asked themselves whether the shock of the torpedo would not infallibly destroy the little vessel which bore it. It was feared that the lives of the second lieutenant, Longstre, and his three companions were absolutely sacrificed.

However, the two vessels got visibly nearer. All at once the Thornycroft put with its whole force on the starboard bow. The sea was terribly agitated, a deafening report was heard, and the Bayonnaise, by the shock of the explosion, was hurled rapidly. As for the Thornycroft, rebounding by the shock about 15 metres off, even before the explosion occurred, it was again hurled in a few moments, and then quietly summed the direction of the Bayonnaise; it was literally swallowed up, and as she rose she was seen to be repeating, with another disabled ship, and with the same success. The "Times" correspondent says: "The little torpedo boat, with its lateen sails, resembles a small grey lizard, and is scarcely discernible in the water. It is evident that the experiment of this kind would be unable to approach an enemy's ship unless at dusk, or when it was impossible to distinguish it at a distance. For had such an attempt been made, the bright light, the Thornycroft would manifestly have been knocked to pieces by the guns of the threatened ship before it could have carried out its project. On the other hand, it would be quite impossible for one or even several ships to defend themselves against a simultaneous attack, say, by twenty or thirty of these little torpedo boats, which, in a single year, this experiment presents a formidable problem to State navies. What is certain is, that it is evident that the total number of boats impressed by it, and are persuaded that it is the starting-point of an inevitable transformation in naval tactics."

AMERICAN INVENTIVE PROGRESS.

Under the above heading the Scientific American of May 7th has a long and interesting article, from which we make the following extracts: "To show with what rapidity inventors are now producing inventions embodying original principles, says the writer, it may be noted that in the early days of the sewing machine 116 patents were granted for improvements in a single year; in the case of the 2910 patents issued in the year 1847, 152 were for improved cotton-gins and presses, 164 for improvements on the steam engine, and 125 for novel devices in agriculture. No country has ever produced so many patents in a single year; and the aggregate of patents issued amounted to 17,467; since that time and up to the present the total amounts to 181,000."

And curiously here leads us (adds the editor) to review our own work, extending back, say, twenty years, to 1857, or thereabouts, in the United States and abroad. We find, by actual count, that 62,062 applications have been made through the Scientific American Patent Agency for patents in the United States and abroad. This averages almost ten applications per day; Sundays excluded, over the entire period, and leaves the relation of more than one invention from them in every desirable class in this country up to the time of writing.

A WEALTHY COUNTRY.

All intelligent travellers who have visited Brazil speak in the most glowing terms of the richness of the country, and regard it as the most productive and interesting country on the globe, and the one in which it is the easiest to obtain a livelihood. "Some who have sailed in the United States declare that a vessel can be loaded with Brazil nuts at the expense of only a few cents per bushel. These constitute a valuable article of commerce, while the oil extracted from them is very desirable. All the tropical fruits are produced in Brazil almost without cultivation. The soil in many parts of the country will produce twenty successive crops of cotton, tobacco, or sugar cane without application. No country in Pedro in the variety of its forest production. Prof. Agassiz states that he saw one hundred and seventeen different kinds of valuable wood that was cut from a piece of land not half a mile square. They represented almost every variety of color, and many of them are capable of receiving a high polish. One tree furnishes wax that is used for food, and still another yields a juice which is used in the place of intoxicating liquor. There is a single variety of palm from which the natives obtain food, drink, clothing, bedding, cordage, fishing tackle, medicine and the materials they manufacture into dwellings, weapons, harpoons, and musical instruments. Doubtless the day is not far distant when the valuable wood of Brazil will be used for various useful and ornamental purposes."

To make English Ginger-Ale in small quantities, get a special ground glassed bottle (the Montreal adulterated trash) spoonful cream of tartar, pint molasses, six quarts water. Mix, let stand a few hours until it begins to ferment, then bottle it in a cool place—in eight hours it will be good, and healthier, better and much cheaper than the manufactured trash you have to pay 7 cents a half bottle for.
