Letter from New Mexico (No. 5.)

Mr. Kavin.—The long I have kept my fellow-travellers waiting in mountain gorges Santa Fe. When we arrived early in May, the country was green, the sun in full foliage, and perfumes from beautiful rose gardens and miles upon miles of blossoming orchards greeted us. Now, as we depart, the first crop of grass has been cut, the grain harvested, and the orchards are heavily laden with fruit.

We continue our journey still among the mountains, but amid scenes of such variety that weariness is impossible. Our attention is called to a high forested mountain called Starvation peak. Here many years ago, we are told, a band of Mexicans, driven from their homes by the fierce soldiers of that region, took refuge, but were surrounded and starved to death.

Our first stop is at Albuquerque, the largest city of New Mexico. Like so many of the cities of this region, it is made up of two distinct towns, the American, built of brick and stone, and the Mexican, of adobe, though very neatly put and nicely kept and altogether the best of its kind in Territory.

I will ask my readers to accompany me to the vicinity of New Mexico, generally situated upon a high hill behind the town, which it was possible to bring some adobe, though very neatly put and nicely kept and altogether the best of its kind in Territory.

The view is one of the fairest the eye of man ever looked upon. Above the town, the Rio Grande, the largest river in all our western valleys, flows in a narrow channel, and on every side, the beautiful terraces of the Rio Grande, which here and there spreads out into vast mesas, on which thousands of cattle are grazing, past American territory, and into the Indian lands, never at an elevation of less than 4000 feet, until about noon we arrive at the foot of the Grand Falls.

Mr. J. A. Brown had the misfortune to step on a nail last week, which passed through his foot. However, Mr. B. sent him to his work, although the wound is painful. Officers for Nelson Division: S. C. Guilt of Murder.

Angus E. Gilbert, charged with the murder of eight-year-old Alice M. Surling, in Emma's barn, Denney street, Dorchester, Mass., April 20, was found guilty by a jury in the first degree last night. Prisoner did not flinch but took the verdict with seeming stolidity. The jury was in deliberation one hour and ten minutes. They took three ballots. The first stood 11 to 1; the second 10 to 2, and the third and last 12 for first degree in the first degree. The heaviest jurors felt about Gilbert's clothing. They afterwards became satisfied, they felt they were cleared up, and agreed with their fellow-jurors to convict him of first degree murder. The verdict was brought into court by the deputy sheriff. The government went to the jury with the facts of the case. DEFENDANT'S CRIME MADE WITHIN ALL THESE CLASSES OF MURDER.

The first degree as defined by the statute of this Commonwealth. This statute is "murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought; or in commission or attempt to commit a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life; committed with cruel atrocity or cruelty; or murder in the first degree." The government maintained in its most powerful argument by Attorney General, Joseph H. Choate, lieutenant-governor of Quebec, Hon. L. O. Taillon, premier of Quebec, Sir Alex. Cochrane, chief justice of Quebec and court of Queen Bench, Sir Napoleon Casault, Bishop Courtney, Nova Scotia, Dr. Bourinot, M. G., and W. R. Ives, president of the Privy Council.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of our correspondents. LAWRENCETOWN, July 2nd, 1895. Mr.—Editor, Dear Sir,—I am requested to ask you to publish the following resolution: That Nelson Division does not consider either the time or the state of public sentiment unfavorable for temperance convention work, and that from information as had the efforts of the president and secretary of the Annapolis county temperance convention has not been sufficient to the propriety of immediate action on the lines of political temperance reform in this county. Yours truly, J. R. ELLIOTT.
