BY A BLACKSMITH,

With an Introduction by

THE REV. ALBERT CARMAN, D.D.

The following notices are a sentence or two from each writer, clipped in most cases from long reviews of the book:

Rev. E. B. Ryckman, D.D.—I am glad to commend this timely book. It commends itself to my heart.

Rev. W. B. Carey, M.A., Rural Dean, Frontenac.—I am delighted with it.

Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D.D., pastor St. James' Square Presbyterian Church, Toronto, formerly Professor of Theology in Alleghany Seminary.—I found it difficult to lay it down when I had begun, and felt it very quickening and helpful.

The Canada Presbyterian.—The title so long and honorably borne by Elihu Burritt, "The Learned Blacksmith," might fairly be claimed by the author of this plain, pithy and practical work on systematic giving.

Rev. J. W. Sparling.—It is the most racy and readable treatise on this vastly important subject that I have yet seen.

Rev. Principal Caven, D.D., Knox College, Toronto.—Your book on systematic giving is interesting and valuable, and fitted to be highly useful.

Rev. James Hannon.—Sound in its teaching, practical and brilliant in its illustration, it is worth its weight in gold.

Rev. W. S. Pascoe.—I have read "The Path of Wealth" with very great interest. It is a book for the times.

Rev. Joseph Wild, D.D., pastor Bond Street Congregational Church, Toronto.—I have read several works on tithing, but this is by far the best.

From the Presbyterian Record.—It contains a powerful plea for systematic beneficence, and deals sledge hammer blows deservedly on bazaars, lotteries, and "spasmodic efforts" for raising money for the Lord's treasury. Pass it around.

Rev. Chas. A. Cook, pastor Parliament Street Baptist Church, Toronto.—Anyone who has the slightest doubt or difficulty about the Lord's claim upon the tenth of every man's income, will have both doubts and difficulties dispelled by reading this book.

Rev. John Potts, D.D., General Secretary of Education.—The subject is treated with remarkable clearness and ability. I commend it most heartily.

Rev. J. H. McMorine, M.A., pastor St. James' Church, Kingston.—The writer has the faculty of "putting things" in a forcible and fitting manner.

This is a book of 416 pages, including the engravings. It is handsomely bound in cloth with stiff boards. It is illustrated with portraits of many prominent givers.

It retails for the low price of $1.75, but we make a special offer 'to hold good for three months: We will send a single copy postpaid to any address on receipt of $1, or will send two copies to one address postpaid for $1.50, if the sender will promise to give the surplus copy away.
