

A Thought For Washing Day.

Jilda Ward Howe, in Youth's Companion.

The clothes-line is a Rosary
Of household help and care;
Each little saint the mother loves
Is represented there.

And when across her garden plot
She walks, with thoughtful heed,
I should not wonder if she told
Each garment for a bead.

For Celia's scarlet stockings hang
Beside Amelia's skirt
And Bilbo's breeches, which of late
Were sadly smeared with dirt.

Yon kerchief small wiped bitter tears
For ill-success at school;
This pinafore was torn in strife
Twixt Fred and little Jule.

And that device of finest web
And overcast lace
Adorned our outfit when she danced
At some gay fashion place.

A stranger passing, I salute
The household in its wear,
And smile to think how near of kin
Are love and toil and prayer.

The Late Bishop Wadhams.

In the "Reminiscences of the late Bishop Wadhams" in the Catholic World numerous examples for the Christian and gentleman can be found. One morning he found it necessary to take his servant to task for a neglect of duty. "You neglect the fires, John," he said. "The house is too cold. I feel it, and the whole household suffers from it." John took the reproof humbly and quietly, only taking advantage of a short pause to say: "Did you have a good sleep last night, Bishop?" Being determined to make an impression on the mind of his attendant the Bishop continued to enlarge upon the matter. When this was over John only replied: "Is there any other matter, sir, you'd like to mention?" "No," was the reply; "you may go now. Yes; wait a moment." Then after a short pause the Bishop continued: "John, when you came into my room a little while ago you wished me good morning. I forgot to return the salute. Afterwards you asked me if I had had a good sleep. I forgot to answer that also. I found fault with you instead, and you never said a word or looked sullen. John, I can't afford to let you be more of a gentleman than I am. Good morning to you, John. Did I have a good sleep? No; I had a very bad night of it. No fault of yours, though. And now you may go, and God bless you."

Plenary indulgence to those who will take part in the spiritual exercises and in the missions which will be given in the year 1893; and all these, provided that having confessed and communicated, they pray according to the intentions of the Holy Father. 4. Curran.

One morning at an inn in the South of Ireland, a gentleman travelling upon mercantile business came running down stairs a few minutes before the appearance of the stage coach, in which he had taken a seat for Dublin. Seeing an ugly little fellow leaning against the door-post, with dirty face and shabby clothes, he hailed him and ordered him to brush his clothes. The operation proceeding rather slowly, the impatient traveler cursed the lazy valet, for an idle, good-for-nothing dog, and threatened him with corporal punishment on the spot if he did not make haste and finish his job well before the arrival of the coach. Terror seemed to produce its effect; the fellow brushed the coat and then the trousers with great diligence, and was rewarded with sixpence, which he received with a low bow. The gentleman went into the bar and paid his bill, just as the expected vehicle reached the door. Upon getting inside guess his astonishment to find his friend the quondam waiter, seated snugly in one corner, with all the looks of a person well used to comfort. After one or two hurried glances, to be sure that his eyes did not deceive him, he commenced a confused apology for his blunder, condemning his own rashness and stupidity; but he was speedily interrupted by the other, exclaiming: "Oh, never mind, make no apologies—these are hard times, and it is well to earn a trifle in an honest way. I am much obliged for your handsome fee for so small a job—my name, sir, is John Philpot Curran; pray what is yours?" The other was thunderstruck by the idea of such an introduction; but the drollery of Curran soon overcame his confusion, and the traveler never rejoiced less at the termination of his long journey, than when he beheld the distant spires of Dublin glitter in the light of the setting sun.
