

THE NAME OF JESUS is an irreplaceable rampart. There is no pearl or ornament that can be compared to the name of Jesus. It is the sound the harp's sweet harmonics when we pronounce the name of Jesus.—D. Henry Ross.

A Royal Betrothal

(By Chas. Graves.)

Who does not know San Salino, that southern seaboard Elysium where health and pleasure seekers of all types, grades, degrees and nationalities do congregate, arrayed in bath towels, shod with rope sandals and crowned with broad leaved palm leaf hats? Here the Bordeaux merchant rises down his cares, oblivious of the haze in glucose or the increased import tax on logwood. Here the American millionaire shifts for a while the burden of his millions, the English peer is said to occasionally forget that he is somebody, and here the crowned heads of Europe play at being nobodies, with more or less success.

no heed of him. She, too, wore a short, loose frock of unbleached linen, but it was curiously embroidered at the throat, hem and sleeves, with silk of bright, barbaric hue and gaudy tassels adorned her hempen footgear. Her slim, brown arms and legs, like the fair limbs of the boy, were bare, and her rich chestnut brown locks danced, as she did, without restraint, for her broad leaved palm hat had fallen off and lay upon the sands, where the little pink crabs were scuttling amid the ripple marks, and the air bubbles of hidden shellfish quivered and shone like bells of crystal in the hot, bright sunshine.

from the dance. Her eyes were of an odd agate color, and fringed with wonderfully thick, black lashes, and her chestnut colored eyebrows were traced on her delicate temples as though a fine pencil had drawn them. And her flushed face was like a ripe acetone. "One pretends - when one wishes to amuse one's self. And here it is so triste and dull!"

and twelve old women—" The proud little nostrils dilated with disgust. "Oh! That is a horrid story!" "No; it is true - quite true! It was at the Cathedral of San Ignacio. The Cardinal Archbishop held the silver basin, and there was a Suleiman Mass. I gave the people new clothing and food, salted fish and ham and cheese, a dose of so much to each, besides gold and silver in little crimson bags. It is the royal offering. Then, the next day, came the royal pilgrimage. The whole court, dressed in deep mourning goes out on foot to visit all the churches in the city, led by the King and Queen. Whether it rain or hail, it would be the same. This year it rained. My mother said, when I showed her how the wet dripped off my sleeves, 'My son, the Monarch of Monarchs went shelterless in all weathers through Him. Shall the King of Ibero grumble, then, at a few drops of rain?'" phic, or Charlotte. It is a secret why not." "Tell me!" cried Eve, leaning over and taking hold of the crimson sash. Then, as the King moved nearer, she rubbed her round, velvet cheek against the shoulder of the linen blouse, repeating, "Tell me!"
