

CANADIANS' GLORIOUS STRUGGLE FOR PASSCHENDAELE

No matter how battered, the wounded loves his cigarette. Matches were evidently scarce at Passchendaele.

The way to the aid station is often rough, but the stretcher bearers do their best to make the journey easy.

Wounded Canadians on their way back from Passchendaele to an aid post. The severest part of a modern battle is not the actual conflict, but the enforced retirement of men from the firing line when suffering from their wounds.
