

- Canada would be concerned with any approach to missile defence which alienated Russia or China, which failed to sustain the gains of the past 30 years in non-proliferation, arms control and disarmament, or which failed to provide a net gain in global security.
- Canada is urging the United States to take all the time needed to fully explore the implications of its thinking on the strategic framework and missile defence and to find a solution that enhances global security.