

impossibility of maintaining a permanent authority over a people so inveterately prejudiced, by ancient and religious customs, against their conquerors, by such means as the company possess, must be apparent to every one. The propriety of colonizing Hindostan has been urged as the best means of maintaining the British power: but this scheme, it is supposed, would interfere with the interests of the company.

THE END OF THE THIRD VOLUME.

---

Printed by Mackenzie and Dent,
St. Nicholas's Church-yard, Newcastle.