session of 1914, the government might well have asked for a fresh mandate from the people.

War Only Half Over.

The prime minister recalled Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at the August session in 1914, in which the leader of the opposition practically declared that he would not oppose, or even criticize the policy of the government win the war within three months Their failure to do so spelled defeat, and I say with a due sense of my responsibility that their ultimate defeat is certain and inevitable. But this empire, of course will not be able to throw the weight of its full strength into the conflict of its full strength into the conflict before the summer of 1916."

Sir Wilfrid's Pledge.

The prime minister said that upon his return from England he told the leader of the opposition what he had learned as to the probable duration of the war and conferences and correspondence between them had followed, he object being to agree upon some plan by which a war-time election could be avoided. The correspondence would not be made public at this time.
As to the result of the conferences the prime minister said that Sir Wilfrid had refused to enter into an agreement by which the elections would be postponed until a year after the conclusion of peace, but had intimated that he would agree to an extension of the parliamentary term for some

The general upshot of the negotiations had been an agreement to suspend party warfare, to avoid all contested in by-elections and to extend the lifetime of parliament for one year. i.e. until October 7, 1917 definite period.

made they have been mistakes of judgment and no worse than the mistakes that have been made in every other part of the British Empire. The

An Eloquent Appeal. In conclusion, after deprecating the evil effects of a party contest during the war, Sir Robert said: "One who has seen 150,000 Canadians under arms, the very flower of the country's youth, whether on the plains of Valcartier or at Shorncliffe, or heading for the trenches in Flanders, one who realizes to the full the uplifting spirit of unity and patriotism which has animated the Canadian people ever since the empire sprang to arms, cannot but shrink from taking a course which would pour upon the glowing fire of united patriotic endeavor the waters of party strife and bitterness. It is for this reason, and in this spirit that the government submits this proposal to the house for its consideration

Percy Grainger, the great Australian pianist-composer, appears at Massey Hall (Loud and prolonged applace in the spring.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier in opening said that the fathers of confederation had modeled the British North America Act upon the British constitution. They had, therefore, definitely limited the term of parliament and had provided for annual and the same and t therefore, definitely limited the term of parliament and had provided for annual sessions. They even went so far as to deprive the Dominion Parliament of any power to ignore or disregard these elementary safeguards of parliamentary government. It would, therefore, be impossible, no matter how urgent the necessity might be, to extend the life of the present house beyond Oct. 7, 1916, without imperial legislation. It was always a serious matter to amend the constitution of the country. The constitution was the ark of the covenant, in which the tables of the law were enclosed and no one could touch the same except at his peril.

At the same time, Sir Wilfrid went on to say, there was and bad been a growing disinclination among the Canadian poople for an election during war time. They felt, and rightly felt, that all our energies should be directed to the successful prosecution of the war. This feeling had no doubt been aggravated by the uncertainty as to the intention of the government and by the threats heard from time to time of an early election.

Rogers' Remarks Quoted.

The reasons advanced by the prime minister against a war time election. Sir Wilfrid said, were cogent, but the same reasons existed and were used as a war time election. Sir Wilfrid said, were cogent, but the same reasons existed and were tust as the same reasons existed and were used as a sight against a war time election. that he would not oppose, or even criticize the policy of the government so long as the enemy was at the front. Since that time there had been a general understanding that an election during war time should be avoided. The war, however, has lasted much longer than wel had anticipated. But how long would the war last? Answering this question. Sir Robert Borden declared that the war was scarcely more than one-half over. It would certainly last all thru 1916, and might not be concluded until the fall of 1917. Lord Kitchener's prediction that the war would last three years would, in all likelihood, be verified.

"It is astounding," said the prime minister, "in view of their preparedness and our lack of preparation that the German-Austrian alliance did not win the war within three months. Their feilure to do so spelled de-However, Sir Wilfrid said, the feelers thus put out elicited an unwelcome response from the people. The people were irritated and disgusted by the fact that the government, instead of devoting isself to the prosecution of the war, was planning party politics and political advantage. Therefore, he was not surprised that when parliament assembled last month. His Royal Highness was made to say that a war-time election was most undesirable and that the lifetime of the parliament should be extended.

Opposed Indefinite Extension. Referring to the negotiations between himself and the prime minister. Sir himself and the prime minister. Sir Wilfrid said that he had declared himself unalterably opposed to an indefinite extension of the parliamentary term.

The principle of periodical elections must not be put in jeopardy, nor should the parliament by its own action attempt to overthrow the supremacy of the electorate. If there was an extension it must be for a definite period. When parliament assembled he had conferred with his followers in the house respecting the advisability of consenting to a postponement of the general elections until the fall of 1917. His followers were not a unit on this subject, but they had asked him to decide for them and he had accepted the responsibility. Evidently the Conservatives were not a unit on the subject because he observed that, while the prime minister quoted freely from Liberal newspapers, he apparently deemed it inadvisable to quote some of while the prime minister quoted freely from Liberal newspapers, he apparently deemed it inadvisable to quote some of the leading Conservative newspapers of the country.

"If we pass this resolution, I take it as a pledge from the government that we shall be delivered from the threat which was held over our heads last year of an instantaneous and premature dissolution. If the government asks us to prolong the life of parliament, I think there will be no election until the fall of 1917."

Turning to his own followers Sir Willer.

other part of the British Empire. The task before us was stupendous. We must remember that before this war many authorities doubted if Great Britain could put an expeditionary force of more than $0,000 men in the ledt; 160,000 was the largest force ever contemplated. Yet Canada had armed and equipped and sent overseas 125,000 men in eighteen months.

An Flourent Appeal.

Jackson of Syracuse, New York, how terrible an enemy to human happiness rheumatism is, and have given him sympathy with all unfortunates who are within its grasp. He wants every rheumatic victim to know how he was cured. Read what he says:

'I Had Sharp Pains Like Lightning Flash Shooting Through My Joints." Shooting Through My Joints."

"In the spring of 1833 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheamatism, and it effected a cure in every case.
