A WOMAN SPEAKS.

Seal Rock, Que., Feb. 20, 1887.

W. H. COMSTOCK.

DEAR SIR,—I have been a very sickly woman for some years and could get nothing to do me any good until I commenced using your MORSE'S INDIAN ROOT PILLS, now I am just as well as I ever was.

Yours &c.,

MRS. GEO. NEWCOMB.

Our own experience, as well as Mrs. Hill's five and twenty years' constant attendance upon and prescribing for children, has convinced us that the great God, whose consummate wisdom makes the mother the nurse and guardian of her loved child, also intended her to be its doctor; and who so well fitted as the never-absent, ever-observant parent? A mother's watchful care, stimulated by her love, would soon surpass the efforts of our best physician.

To understand properly the life-preserving value of a fond mother's attention, look at the fatal result when children are deprived of it. In the Foundling Hospital at Paris there are seven thousand infants yearly admitted, and how many of these children, think you, live to be ten years old? Only one hundred and eighty! Of doctors they have plenty, perhaps too many; likewise good food and warm clothes. The only want is a mother's tender care. But a fond mother has frequently said to us, I am quite aware that my darling children are liable to many disorders peculiar to their young age, but I neither know nor can I know anything of the diseases, and am equally ignorant of any innocent remedies to cure them. I am therefore compelled to entrust their lives, so valuable and dear to me, to those persons who have studied these complaints, and consequently must know how to cure them. These are very plausible remarks, but, fortunate
