ion I had, as I have said told him the story of Mary, with sour slight variaons and coloring, or rather, discoloring, to make it appear a little less to my discredit than the barefaced truth would have been. I told him also about Jane, and, I grieve and blush to say,

But Jane's ears would have heard just as much had they been the pair of beautiful little shells they so much re-This troubled me a great deal, and the best I could hope was that she held me on probation. On the evening of the day Mary came home to Greenwich, Brandon asked: Who and what on earth is this wonderful Mary I hear so much about? They say she is coming home today, and the court seems to have gone mad about it. I hear nothing but 'Mary is coming! Mary is coming! Mary! Mary!' from morning until night. They say Buckingham is beside himself for ove of her. He has a wife at home, if I am right, and is old enough to be her father. Is he not?" I assented, and Brandon continued: "A man who will nake such a fool of himself about a woman is woefully weak. The men of the court must be poor creatures." He had much to learn about the power of womanhood. There is nothing on earth-but you know as much "Wait until you see her," I answered, his head. "and you will be one of them also. I flatter you by giving you one hour with her to be heels over head in love. With ordinary man it takes one-sixtieth of that time. So you see I pay a compliment to your strength of mind."

"Nonsense!" broke in Brandon. "Do you think I left all my wits down in Tolk? Why, man, she is the sister of the king and is sought by kings and emperors. I might as well fall in love with a twinkling star. Then, besides, my heart is not on my sleeve. You must think me a fool—a poor, enervated, simpering fool like—like—well, like one of those nobles of England. Don't put me down with them, Caskoden, if you would remain my friend." We both laughed at this sort of talk, which was a little in advance of the time for a noble, though an idiot to the most of England was a noble still, God created and to be adored.

Now, when Mary returned the whole court rejoiced, and I was anxious for Brandon to meet her and that they should become friends. There would be no trouble in bringing this meeting about, since, as you know, I was upon terms of intimate friendship with Mary and was the avowed and, as I ght, at least hoped, all but accepted lover of her first lady in waiting and dearest friend, Lady Jane Bolingbroke. Brandon, it is true, was not noble, not even an English knight, while I was both knighted and noble, but he was of as old a family as England boasted and near of kin to some of the best blood of the land. The meeting came about sooner than I expected and was very near a failure. It was on the secend morning after Mary's arrival at Greenwich. Brandon and I were walking in the palace park when we met Jane. and I took the opportunity to make these, my two best loved friends,

"How do you do, Master Brandon?" said Lady Jane, holding out her plump little hand, so white and soft and dear to me. "I have heard something of you the last day or so from Sir Edwin, but had begun to fear he was not going to give me the pleasure of knowing you. I hope I may see you often now and that I may present you to my mischievous little smile, as if to say, "Ah, another large handsome fellow to make a fool of himself." Brandon acquiesced in the wish she

> In a short time we came to a summer house near the marble boat landing, where we found the queen and some of her ladies awaiting the rest of their party for a trip down the river which had been planned the day before. Brandon was known to the queen and several of the ladies, although he had not been formally presented at an audience. Many of the king's friends enjoyed a considerable intimacy with the whole court without ever receiving the public stamp of recognition socially which goes with a formal presentation. The queen, seeing us, sent me off to bring the king. After I had gone she asked if any one had seen the Princess Mary, and Brandon told her Lady Jane had said she was at the other side of the grounds. Thereupon her majesty asked Brandon to find the princess and to say that she was wanted. Brandon started off and soon found nnder a spreading oak, weaving spring flowers. He had never seen the princess, so could not positively know her. bring him and said: As a matter of fact he did know her as sand. There was no one like her or anything near it. Some stubborn spirit of opposition, however, prompted him to pretend ignorance. All that he had heard of her wonderful power over men and the servile manner in which they fell before her had aroused in him a spirit of antagonism and had be-gotten a kind of distaste beforehand. He was wrong in this, because Mary was not a coquette in any sense of the word and did absolutely nothing to attract men except to be so beautiful, sweet and winning that they could not let her alone, for all of which surely the prince of fault finders himself could in no way blame her. She could not help that God had seen fit to make her the fairest being on earth, and the responsibility would have to lie where it belonged—with God. Mary would have none of it. Her attractiveness was not a matter of volition or intention on her part. She was too young for deliberate snare setting, though it often begins very no notion on earth of doing, but he let early in life, and made no effort to attract men. Man's love was too cheap a thing for her to strive for, and I am sure in her heart she would infinitely have preferred to live without it-that until the right one should come. The right one is always on his way and, first or last, is sure to come to every woman—sometimes, alas, too late—and when he comes, be it late or early, she crowns him, even though and thrice blessed blindness—else there were fewer coronations. So Brandon stirred this antagonism and determined not to see her manifold perfections, which he felt sure were exaggerated, but to treat her as, he would the queen, who was black and leathery enough to frighten a satyr, with all respect due to her rank, but with his own opinion of her nevertheless safely stored away in the back of

Coming up to the group, Brandon took off his hat and, with a graceful little bow that let the curls fall around his face, asked. "Have I the honor to find the Princess Mary among these

Mary, who I know you will at once say was thoroughly spoiled, without turning her face toward him replied: "Is the Princess Mary a person of so little consequence about the court that she is not known to a mighty captain of the guard?" He wore his guardsman's doublet, and she knew his rank by his uniform. She had not noticed his face.

Quick as a flash came the answer: "I cannot say of what consequence the Princess Mary is about the court. It is not my place to determine such matters. I am sure, however, she is not here, for I doubt not she would have given a gentler answer to a message from the queen. I shall continue my search." With this he turned to leave, and the ladies, including Jane, who was there and saw it all and told me of it, awaited the bolt they knew would come, for they saw the lightning gathering in Mary's eyes.

Mary sprang to her feet with an angry flush in her face, exclaiming: "Insolent fellow, I am the Princess Mary. If you have a message, deliver it and gone." You may be sure this sort of treatment was such as the cool headed, daring Brandon would repay with usury; so, turning upon his heel and almost presenting his back to Mary, he spoke to Lady Jane;
"Will your ladyship say to her highness that her majesty the queen awaits her coming at the marble landing?" "No need to repeat the message, Jane," cried Mary. "I have ears and can hear for myself." Then, turning to Brandon, "If your insolence will permit you to receive a message from so insignificant a person as the king's sister, I beg you to say to the queen that I shall with her presently. He did not turn his face toward Mary, but bowed again to Jane. "May I ask your ladyship further to say for me that if I have been guilty of any discourtesy I greatly regret it. My failure to recognize the Princess Mary grew out of my misfortune in never With this her eyes, bright as over- having been allowed to bask in the grown dewdrops, twinkled with a mis- light of her countenance. Her faults were rather those of education than of nature. "Jane is right. It was what I deserved. I did not think when I spoke and did not really mean it as it sounded. He acted like a man and looked like one, too, when he defended himself. I warrant the pope at Rome could not run over him with impunity. For once I have found a real live man, full of manitness. I saw him in the lists at Windsor a week ago, but the king said his name was a secret, and I could not learn it. He seemed to know you, Jane. Who is he? Now tell us all you know. The
