"John Smith being sworn said he was a carpenter. He worked at his trade for twenty years and knew the lefendant for ten years."

And the summary: "John Smith, a carpenter, knew defendant for ten years." The yellow fever, however, will olved a new style of reporting: "John Smith, a tak and angularly ormed fellow with bushy red hair and faming whiskers, was sworn. He kissd the Book with a resounding smack. adjusted his green necktle, sat down in the witness chair, ran his right hand through his ruby locks, crossed his legs, which were closely incased in blue and white trousers of the latest cut, and then looked straight into the eyes of Counsellor Jones. In solemn tones the latter asked him his business. 'I am a carpenter,' was the humble reply, made in a clear and high-pitched voice that was heard distinctly in the remotest corner of the court room. 'How long have you been a carenter?' asked Mr. Jones with a threatening look in his left eye. 'I have been a carpenter, sir,' said the witness with reat dignity and fully appreciating the importance of the question, 'during the past twenty years.' Then Mr. Jones drew himself up to his fullest he eight and extending his right arm at an angle of forty-five degrees he brought it down again swiftly until his huge fist struck the table with a horrible dull thud. 'Do you know the defend-ant?' he shouted in thunderous tones. o'clock. 'I do,' was the reply, made in accents pitched in a high key, which contrasted strangely with the cavernous tone of the learned counsel. Then Mr. Jones with flashing eyes and clenched fist coiled himself up like a serpent and hissed, 'How long have you known him?' 'Ten years,' was the answer ossed back to the lawyer with lightning-like rapidity."
