HOW WASH LINEN SUITS

Women who Makes a Living at it Tells the Way—The Great Point is to Shape the Partly Dried Frock Over a Form—Sun Drying for White Material and Shade for Colors—Two Suits for all Summer.

(New York Sun.)

"We work with linen suits exclusively and get all that we can do," said a young woman who is doing a good business laundering linen suits at a summer resort.

"Though our method is new, it is quite simple. If you have ever worn a wash chambray blouse you know how much better it fits if allowed to do the last drying on your hand. We apply this idea to linen suits and the result suits they keep their shape to perfection. The trouble with washing linen suits in the regular way is first the wringing. Wringing a piece of wet kerchief and you will find it crooked, needing quite a little pulling to get back in shape. Wring a linen or cotton suit and it is almost impossible to get it in shape again.

"We never wring our clothes in the usual way. After a garment is washed in water it is pressed out. The wet garment is folded and placed in a strong homespun sheet. The sheet is then wrung. It requires two persons to do it, but the garment is in no way twisted out of shape. After the wringing it is partially dried out of doors, in the sun if it is white, in the shade if colored. Even tan linens should be dried in the shade.

"Before it is entirely dried it is brought in the ironing room and ironed, not dry; then it is placed on a form and by pulling here and pressing there a perfect shape is attained. Our object is to get it to look and fit as it did when sent home by the tailor. A linen suit is carefully cut and made it can be washed any number of times and returned in the best shape.

"The first step in our work is to examine the linen suits as they are brought in to us. If they are poorly cut we return them, explaining why it will be impossible for us to undertake to launder them. As a rule they are returned with the request that we do the best we can. If the cutting is quite hopeless we persist in our refusal and advise dry cleaning.

"The great objection to linen suits is that they get out of shape when washed. Among women, of wealth, it has been the custom to wear a linen suit until it was sent to the laundry and then discard it. Now that even the tailor suits are being so elaborately embroidered this is too extravagant even for the very wealthy.

so many women have been having their suits ripped up, laundered and then remade. It is better than discarding the suit entirely.

"It was being called on to remake a haberdashery embroidered suit of this kind that made me think of opening my laundry. With my knowledge of sewing and fitting I felt that it would be quite safe to guarantee a fit. Though I had always managed to wash and iron my own linen suits satisfactorily I knew if I should happen to get a handsome suit stretched out of shape it would be an awful matter for me to rip it up and remake it. So far I have only had to rip and remake suits that have been poorly made.

"For washing linen suits I use only the best white soap and I never rub the soap on the cloth unless there is a lot of hard water taken out in the majority of cases I soak for an hour or so in soapy water, putting them in when the water is quite hot. By the time it is cool enough to permit washing freely the soiled parts are sufficiently soft to admit of cleaning without very much scrubbing. I rinse in moody water, always until the last water is perfectly clear. Then I pass through the stiffening water, after which it is pressed as dry as possible in the cotton sheet.

"Some stiffening is necessary to give the linen the appearance of freshness which it has when it comes to you from the tailor. On the other hand the care should be taken not to have too much stiffening. That ruins the appearance of what would otherwise be a perfectly washed suit. You want just enough to give the linen body and yet not take away from its suppleness.

"Washing colored linens, excepting tan and brown, is a laborious task to try always to avoid putting soap on colored linen and also I do not use water hotter than blood heat all day. Where the suit is not much soiled two will be enough. The stiffening water must be colored just as the last water in which the washing and rinsing was done.

"After wringing in the cotton sheet care must be taken in hanging both coats and skirts for the drying purpose. Fresh air for colored linen and sun for the white that is the ideal drying process and I give it except in rainy weather. House drying never gives the satisfaction that a good laundress wants for her work. Steam drying should be a last resort. It injures the texture of the goods and leaves the colors less brilliant.

"The figures on which I allow my suits to get their final shaping are the kind used by good dressmakers and tailors. I have all sizes and covered so that the suits get as nearly as possible the shape of their owners. I keep the figures arrayed in fresh petticoats and shirts and when the freshly washed suits are on them I am not ashamed for any one to walk into my shaping rooms. Each suit is taken from the figure and placed in its box for shipment. Great care is taken to see that every part of it is perfectly dry.

"Last summer I had a customer who lived in two white linen suits. They were plain tailored suits and exactly alike. I washed each suit twice a week during the entire season, and she had the reputation of being the best groomed woman at the resort. At the end of the season her suits were so far as appearance went, as new and fresh as they were when they were sent in by the tailor. She told me that these suits had been cut under her own eye, because the summer before that same tailor had ruined a handsome suit for her, cutting an underarm of the coat on the bias.

"Of course having her suits washed so often made it a pretty expensive way of dressing, but in no other could she have got the same effect for as little money. Though my prices are high they are less than making over a linen suit and the result is as good or even better. Where a woman wishes to be thoroughly well groomed she cannot wear a white or light colored linen suit more than one time. Linen, though the smartest of summer materials, is also the easiest mused. White cotton duck can be worn three times as long as linen, but it is never as smart. I have a great many white cotton duck suits, and the wearers get a lot of comfort out of them, but they all realize that they are not in the same class with their linens.

"When the buttons are large or unusual I generally remove them before putting the suit in water. These buttons are cleaned separately and put on the suit while it is undergoing the shaping process on the figures. Soap suds and a toothbrush is usually the best method for cleaning buttons. For white pearl a final polishing with a chambray or piece of soft flannel gets the best results. As I am careful to have each place marked with a thread when the buttons are removed it is a simple matter to sew them back."
