tion, so the ing to the law of etiquette taken his departure on the arrival of Mr. Bunting.

"Don't like to contradict a lady," said Mr. Bunting "but I can't say I agree with you; and these foreigners are geneally impostors, too,"

Mrs. Hunter shook her head coquettishly. She was rather coquettish and gushing for her age.

"Oh, you gentlemen! you gentlemen!" of their favors: promises every department may be properly conducted.

"Butting "Bunting of Mr. Bunting." She was rather coquettish and gushing for her age.

"Oh, aphones," cried the widow. "But there, I will be firm. My best friends warned me of you. Take your hat—go. Never entermy presence again. Go with your unfortunate child, your poor, half-starved little girl. Go home to your deserted wife. Go!"

"And then she ran the bell, and ordered the servant to serve tea, and pressed the unfortunate Frenchman, losing his English in his excitement." "Out of my house!" cried the widow. "Peggy, open the door. Go! What an the house to play propriety, and allow her the door.

"She did not ask him to stay, and she did ask me," said Mr. Bunting, and departed, after a most delightful evening, while the maiden aunt, who was at best as deaf as a post, snored sweetly in her chair.

But, alas! on the very next evening his sky was overcast. Professor La Fontaine took the widow to the opera. He saw them enter the doors of the opera house; and having followed and secured a seat in a retired portion of the house, also noticed that the Professor kept his eyes fixed upon the lady's face in the most impressive manner during the whole of the performance, and that she now and then even returned his glances.

"It can't go on," said Mr. Bunting to himself. "I can't allow it. She'd regret it all her life. I must remonstrate with her. No woman likes a coward. Faint heart never won fair lady. She'il admire me for speaking out."

And that very evening Mr. Bunting trotted up to the widow's house, full of deadly purpose, and with a set special learned off by heart. The speech he for got as he crossed the threshold. The purpose abided with him. There were the usual remarks about the weather. After which the thought of her fiance consoled her.

Days passed on. Bachelor Bunting did not drown himself or sup cold poison. The wedding was fixed. The housemaid informed her friends that Mrs. Hunter "kept steady company." The maiden aunt who had no income of her own, curried favor by being almost always in a state of apparent coma. The widow was in the seventh heaven of bliss, and all went merry as a marriage bell until one evening as the betrothed pair sat before the fire in the polished grate, there came a ring at the door bell, and the girl who answered it looked into the parlor to announce the fact that a little girl in the hall would come in.

"Oh, let her come in," said Mrs. Hunter. "Tm so fond of the dear children in the neighborhood. It's some of them I presume."]
