

Emancipate

Riou also hopes to raise student awareness, including his own.

"I want a breakdown of where the money [that is being cut from education] is going. Who is involved and what is the reason behind tuition hikes?"

Riou, a masters student in History at Dalhousie, is also concerned that certain education programs will receive more funding than others.

"Beyond tuition, how much money are we talking about and where is it going to? Will we see a trend to more dollars to science and less to liberal arts, and if that is seen as a good thing, what direction is society moving in?"

Riou says that if students know what they want, government should respond.

"If the powers that be...pay attention to what students are saying, then the decisions should reflect that."

"If you believe in something you'll do it," said Riou about the planned protest, "and that's what we're banking on here. As Bob Marley said, 'Emancipate yourself from mental slavery.'"
