to the sentence that had been pronounced upon him the evening before.

I got the knife away from the kid and made him lie down again. But, from that moment, Bill's spirit was broken. He laid down on his side of the bed, but he never closed an eye again in sleep as long as that boy was with us. I dozed off for a while, but towards dawn I remembered that Red Chief had said I was to be burnt at the stake at the rising of the sun. I wasn't nervous or afraid; but I sat up and lit my pipe and leant against a rock.

"What are you getting up so soon for, Sam?" asked Bill.

"Me?" says I. "Oh, I've got a kind of pain in my shoulder. I thought sitting up would rest it."

"You're a liar!" says Bill. "You're afraid. You was to be burnt at sunrise, and you was afraid he'd do it. And he would, too, if he could find a match. Ain't it awful, Sam? Do you think anybody will pay out money to get a little imp like that back home?"

"Sure," said I. "A rowdy kid like this is just the kind that parents dote on. Now, you and the Chief get up and cook breakfast, while I go up on the top of this mountain and reconnoitre."

I went up on the peak of the little mountain and ran my eye over the contiguous vicinity. Over toward Summit I expected to see the sturdy yeomanry of the village armed with scythes and pitchforks, beating the countryside for the dastardly kidnappers. But what I saw was a peaceful landscape dotted with one man ploughing with a dun mule.

"Perhaps," I says to myself, "it has not yet been discovered that the wolves have borne away the tender lambskin from the fold. Heaven help the wolves!" says I, and I went down the mountain to breakfast.

When I got to the cave I found Bill backed up the side of it, breathing hard, and the boy threatening to smash him with a rock as big as a coconut.

"He put a red-hot boiled potato down my back," explained Bill, "and then mashed it with his foot, and I boxed his ears. Have you got a gun about you, Sam?"

I took away the rock from the boy, and kind of patched up the argument. "I'll fix you," explained the kid to Bill. "No man ever yet struck the Red Chief, but what he got paid for it. You'd better beware!"

After breakfast the kid takes a piece of leather with strings wrapped round it out of his pocket, and goes outside the cave unwinding it.

"What's he up to now?" says Bill anxiously. "You don't think he'll run away, do you, Sam?"

"No fear of it," says I. "He don't seem to be much of a home-bird. But we've got to fix up some plan about the ransom. There don't seem to be much excitement in Summit on account of his disappearance; but, maybe, they haven't realised yet that he's gone. His folks may think he's spending the night with Aunt Jane or one of the neighbors. Anyhow, he'll be missed to-day. To-night we must get a message to his father, demanding the two thousand dollars for his return."

Just then we heard a kind of war-whoop, such as David might have emitted when he knocked out the champion Goliath.

It was a sling that Red Chief had pulled out of his pocket, and he was whirling it round his head.

I dodged, and heard a heavy thud and a kind of sigh from Bill, like a horse gives out when you take his saddle off. A rock, the size of an egg, had caught Bill just behind his left ear. He loosened himself all over and fell in the fire, across the frying pan of hot water for washing the dishes.

I went out and caught that boy and shook him until his freckles rattled.

"If you don't behave," says I, "I'll take you straight home. Now, are you going to be good, or not?"

"I was only funning," says he sullenly. "I didn't mean to hurt Old Hank. But what did he hit me for? I'll behave, Snake-eye, if you won't send me home, and if you'll let me play the Black Scout to-day."

"I don't know the game," says I. "That's for you and Mr. Bill to decide. He's your playmate for the day. I'm going away for a while on business. Now, you come in and make friends with
