Trouble in the East.

Everybody knows that there is danger of another war in the East, and that Britain is, as usual, concerned in it. Those Oriental disturbances are very perplexing to the non-historical reader. The good quiet people, such as the majority of the readers of the Posr, always know that the East is chronically unsettled, and do not attempt to keep the run of affairs, attempt to keep the run of affairs. This is doubtless wise as a rule, for This is doubtless wise as a rule, for the suddenly awakened that it elected Sir Albert Smith attempt to keep the run of affairs. So the Governor-General of Egypt, known as the Khedive, nominally subject to the Sultan, is virtually king if he can maintain his authority over his subjects. But here comes the rub. The present Khedive is not master of the ituation. His generals have got the upper hand of him, and he is driven about from pillar to post, unable to control anybody. Arabi Bey is the strong man in Egypt. He has com-
