Reminiscences of Father Walter.

(Correspondence of The Standard and Times.)

WASHINGTON, April 2.—The rectory of St. Patrick's Church, the demolition of which has just been completed, was one of Washington's landmarks, not by reason of age, but because the strong personality of Father Walter, who built it and whose home it was for many years, made for it a place in the city's history.

In the stormy days that immediately followed the close of the civil war this house was the cynosure of countless eyes. The stern and fiery yet tender and devoted priest was still on the sunny side of middle life. A native of Baltimore, he had never paraded, yet never made any secret of his sympathy with the South. As pastor, and later as the last spiritual adviser of Mrs. Sarratt, he was firmly convinced of her innocence, and made every possible effort to save her life. When the last terrible hour drew near he received from the military authorities a suggestion that it would be better for him not to accompany his unfortunate parishioner to the scaffold. His reply, which was characteristic, was as follows:

"Tell the Secretary of War that I fear neither man nor devil. I fear God alone, and I will defend with my life the character of the least and lowliest of my parishioners." The heroic priest had heard Mrs. Sarratt's last confession early in the morning, and at the hour of execution he had no duty to perform except to sustain her by his presence. The lower limbs of the condemned were bound by soldiers designated for that duty. This service, if Mrs. Sarratt had been neglected, Father Walter had promised to perform for her, though he should be shot in the act. When the execution was over Father Walter sought his bed, and for a week afterward was prostrated by illness.

Father Walter devoutly believed that his sick calls were not all conveyed by human agency and that the old-fashioned bell of the rectory on at least a few occasions had been rung by shadowy hands. Among his favorite recollections was the visit to him near a quarter of a century ago of two little boys, who, having rung the bell, were waiting on the stoop when Father Walter opened the door. They seemed to be about eight and ten years of age. They requested him to administer to their dying father the last rites of the Church. The address that they gave was in a poor and remote portion of the city, but the good priest lost no time in seeking it. It was a forlorn old building, and in one of its rooms, destitute of even the barest comforts, he found the dying man. Father Walter prepared the unfortunate for death, and as there was no other human being in sight or hearing, he said: "My son where are your little ones?" "I have no family," said the dying man.

"Bat," replied Father Walter, "the children who came for me and said they were your sons." "I once had two little boys," said the departing, "but they died many years ago."

State Insurance for Working Classes.

Everyone knows that the Germans have been the pioneers in legislation for workmen and that in this matter they are far in advance of all other nations. And it can be truly said since the days of Bishop von Ketteler, long before the existence of the Socialist party, the Catholics have been the leaders in this great work whom the Government and other political parties have followed, often very reluctantly. By their untiring activity in and out of Parliament and by their votes in the Reichstag, they have brought about the great results of which Germany is so justly proud. The first President of the Imperial Insurance Office, in fact the chief organizer of the gigantic work, which was a veritable leap in the dark, was a distinguished Catholic, Dr. Badiker, who held the office for thirteen years. We take a few facts and figures from a lecture which he delivered lately in Berlin. Imperial insurance comprises three departments: insurance against sickness, against accidents, against ill-health and old age. Insurance is compulsory and the insurance money is drawn from three sources, from the workmen, the employers and the State. The number of persons insured is: 10.3 millions against sickness; 13.4 millions against ill health and old age. More than 500 million marks are paid yearly into the insurance office.

Down to the year 1903 over four milliards had been paid in pensions a capital or fund of over 1.5 milliard has been accumulated, and 300 millions of marks have been expended over and above the pensions for the welfare of the working classes, in building and equipping sanatoria for consumptives, etc. As experience advanced, throwing new light upon the subject and showing the flaws of the original legislation, these laws are gradually being improved and new classes of working men and women are admitted to the enjoyment of pensions. It is needless to say that the Centre party holds to this day the position of undisputed leadership in this great social work.—Chronicle of Monthly Messenger Magazine.

Items of Interest.

Archbishop Bourne, of Westminster, has just received from the lady of his former diocese (South-west) a very fine pair of carriage horses and a carriage and the decoration of the Archbishop's throne room at Westminster. The horses alone are valued at 300 guineas. The presentation address was made by the Duke of Norfolk.

A new Catholic club was recently opened in Johannesburg, Transvaal Colony. The club building was erected at a cost of £11,500 (about $57,500) and is one of the handsomest buildings in Johannesburg. The membership of the club is at present 500, of which about one-third are honorary members, that is, non-Catholics.

A cablegram from Rome stated that the famous sanatorium dedicated to St. Michael, on Mount Gargano, near Foggia, was recently entered by thieves, who, breaking the crystal inclosing the statue of the saint, stole all the precious ornaments which had been left as votive offerings. Necklaces, rings, bracelets, pins and other jewelry were taken.

On March 19 the Criminal Court at Douai, France, rendered a verdict in the case of twenty-seven prisoners charged with being implicated in the attempted assassination of two priests during the strike troubles at Arras last August. Thirteen of the prisoners were convicted and fourteen were acquitted. Of those convicted, two were sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment and one to eight years' imprisonment and one to five years' solitary confinement and nine to various terms of imprisonment.

Much of the Irish emigration to the United States is influenced by false notions of the opportunities afforded here for self advancement in a material and social sense," says the Monitor. "Some immigrants undoubtedly realize their expectations in this regard, but their proportion to the number who not only do not improve their condition, but in many respects, find themselves much worse off in this country than they were at home, does not justify the hopes that are draining Iria of its vitality."

"Who would not like to be on the Panama Canal Commission," asks the Michigan Catholic, "with a nine or ten years' job under Uncle Sam, partly in Panama, but most of the time hanging around Washington, at $12,000 a year, and $5 a day expenses. We would be satisfied with the daily allowance, which would start us in life with $105 a week. Uncle Sam is a generous employer when you are on the right side of the gent."

Ottawa, April 2.—His Grace Archbishop Duhamel will probably appoint a commission of clergy and laymen to prepare a list of music for Masses and other religious services to be used in this archdiocese. This is an outcome of the recent Papal encyclical, motu proprio, on Organ music and singing, by which all pastors and choir leaders are directed to return to the solemn religious music of the Gregorian or plain chant in all church services. As women's voices are unsuited to the singing of the plain chant, they will be gradually eliminated from the choir. When the new order is established all the men singing in the church will wear soutane and surplice, the same as those in the sanctuary.

His Holiness Pius X. lately received in special audience a young Benedictine monk, the Rev. Dom. Gregory Gerrer, but now attached to St. Ambrose's College, Rome. This monk is a painter of considerable merit. He has been recently brought to work on a portrait of Pius X., and brought it with him to show it to the Pontiff. The Pope was quite impressed by the rare ability displayed by the young Benedictine, and when the latter asked him for a sitting in order that he might correct any faults or improve the picture as set up, Pius X. took the place desired by the artist and the monk set to work with all diligence. The work is intended for America. Those who have seen it declare it to be one of the best which has yet been made of the new Pope.

On Holy Thursday Emperor Francis Joseph performed the ancient ceremony of washing the feet of twelve old men in the Crystal Hall of the Hofburg, Vienna. The hall was filled with distinguished personages, including members of the diplomatic corps, the Cabinet Ministers, military officials and art functionaries. The Emperor, escorted by eight archbishops, personally waited on the old men, placing before them food and drink, which, however, they did not consume then, the refreshments being immediately removed and sent to their homes. The ceremony ended with his Majesty hanging around the neck of each of the old men a silk purse containing the traditional thirty pieces of silver. The United States was represented at the ceremony by Ambassador Storor and Mrs. Storor Captain F. W. Harris, the military attaché; Secretary Hale and Mrs. Hale, Second Secretary Rives and Miss Diehl.

The Catholic Universe in a thoughtful editorial, has the following: "What's the harm of publishing the details of crime in a newspaper that is taken into the family circle? Is there any harm in admitting to the home one who habitually talks scandal and gives full details of crime? Do not the careful parents wish to send the children out or to bed before the man opens his mouth? Certainly. They well know that 'evil communications corrupt good morals,' and that familiarity breeds contempt, and leads persons first to pity and then to embrace crime. Is not the newspaper which gives the full details of crime, and which dresses it up in a sensational manner, more dangerous and destructive of morals than the man who comes to the family circle with his sensational or nasty talk? The man may come uninvited, but the newspaper never does. The parents are responsible for the open admission of the newspaper which corrupts by its sensationalism."

Says the Western Watchman: "When the Folk Laws were enacted, the Catholics of Germany were an insignificant factor in German imperial politics, and a negligible one in Prussia. The moment the orders were expelled they felt that they were attacked to a man, and there arose a spirit of united resistance that in a very short time made itself feared as well as respected. For twelve years the Catholics have held the balance of power in Germany. Today they are the mainstay of order and good government. The order opening the door of the Fatherland to the Jesuits was issued at the stern demand of the indomitable Catholic Centre. The Fathers go back thanking no one but their brave Catholic brethren who would not rest while the government ban was on anything Catholic."

"Saint Outhbert's."

May our publishers go on giving us many more books in the wake of "Saint Outhbert's" by the Rev. J. E. Copus, S. J. We have yet to find that any of our authors of books for boys reach the high water mark that Father Beane, S. J., has attained on the other side of the Atlantic; and even with Father Beane himself we hope for greater success. But all of these earnest writers are striking out in the right direction; they are aiming at Catholic literature for Catholic boys; and the time is not far distant—let us trust—when the tentative talent here, and the exquisite taste and devotion in Great Britain, will become real genius for writing, on Catholic lines, books that can be equaled by no other writers in English. The Catholic Church contains all that is finest and most beautiful for noblest souls. Our boys of today will be interested to learn that some of Father Copus' headings for his chapters, (there are thirty-six chapters and 245 pages) are "The Result of the Sarsa," "Exit the Thief," "How the Boys Enjoyed Themselves," "How the Boys Showed Their Courage"; but just how these things were done, they must read for themselves in the bright book. Price 85 cents. Benziger, publisher. —Sacred Heart Review.
