

What is Good?

What is the best? Order, said the law court; Knowledge, said the school; Truth, said the wise man; Pleasure, said the fool; Love, said the maiden; Beauty, said the page; Freedom, said the dreamer; Honor, said the soldier; Equity, said the seer. Spoke, my heart, fully and truly: 'The answer is not here.' Then within my bosom softly this I heard: 'Each heart holds the secret; Kindness is the word.' —John Boyle O'Reilly.

The Last Figure

(Continued) Suddenly Susanna's brief anger faded. He was such a dear, and so kind, and such a shrewd teacher. She put her hand quickly through his arm. 'I do mind, granddad,' she whispered a little brokenly. 'I don't want mother to know how much it means to me, but I don't care if you do. I really am as competent now as Rosemary, and there isn't any reason why I shouldn't have her place. I can't think now of any figure I can put down, but I'll think it over granddad—and thank you.' His hand closed over hers. 'You're a good sport, Susanna. It's a kind of a Blair trait. You think it over, and something'll come to you I guess. You're competent.' He paused. 'But may be you haven't said so.' It rained all the next day, drenching, flooding sheets of rain, and Susanna had the library virtually to herself. But it was a busy day nevertheless, for she was having a debate with herself. 'What's the use?' she demanded. 'They know I'm here, and they know that I know perfectly well how to catalogue books, or I'm sure they wouldn't let me stay and do it.' 'May be it won't be any use, she retorted to herself, 'but how can you know till you try it? Granddad's answer might have been right, or it might have been wrong; he couldn't tell till he put down the last figure. And anyway, why don't you want to do it? Tes why?' 'Of course now,' declared Susanna indignantly, 'but I've never talked to Judge Bruce; and he's such a silent, gruff-when-he-does-speak sort of a man that I—just hate to.' 'What's that but shy, she gibed to herself. 'You might as well get over it one time as another. What if Judge Bruce does remember you as wearing pig-tails? You're not wearing pig-tails now; so you might as well go and talk to him and show him that you're grown up.' 'Very well,' agreed Susanna. 'I'll do it, and then maybe after that you'll stop bothering me. I'll talk to them all, she flashed magnificently. She went to the telephone. 'Give me 445. Is that Judge Bruce's residence? May I speak to him, please? Judge Bruce, this is Susanna Bryer, Miss Rosemary Weston's assistant at the library. I wonder if you can give me a few moments of your time—to talk over a matter of business,' she added desperately. Except to her own ears her voice was quite composed. 'At seven? Thank you, Judge Bruce.' Dazedly and with burning cheeks she called the rest of the four members of the library committee and made similar requests, arranging matters so that she could see them all that evening. 'And get it over,' declared Susanna, trying to laugh. At seven o'clock she was ringing the judge's doorbell. The judge's wife greeted her kindly. 'Come right in. The judge is expecting you, Susanna. How is your mother?' 'Very well, thank you, Mrs. Bruce,' Susanna replied mechanically, but her thoughts ran swiftly. 'That's it! she told herself forlornly, it's because they all know me. Who wants to ask advice about books from a girl they saw in hot-go-cart?' 'Right in here, dear!' At the sound of Mrs. Bruce's tranquil voice she straightened herself. 'The judge has sent for the other members of the committee. He thought probably you wanted to speak about your work at the library; so to save time he had them come here.' Four of them, solid citizens who had watched her grow up and who regarded her as not yet fully grown! Why, oh, why, had she come? If they wanted her, they would have told her. They would think she was too forward. 'Anyway,' declared Susanna sternly to herself, 'granddad'll be glad I put down the last figure, even if I don't get the right solution.' And she threw up her head gallantly, with a real Blair gesture, granddad would have said, and walked into the judge's study. 'Good evening, gentlemen,' she said. She was so composed and as formal as if it were her first visit to Meadville, and the judge had never seen her skirts an inch less than their present length. 'How do you do, my—how do you do, Miss Bryer.' The judge rose and held out his hand. 'Er, nice evening, Susanna,' extended Mr. Fairbanks, clumsily, extending his hand. Even old Mr. Willis, who was old enough to have sat in the presence of any woman, made acknowledgment of the pretty womanhood of Susanna Bryer. Then Judge Bruce found her a chair. 'I assumed,' he remarked, comfortably, 'that you wished to talk about the library; so we are all here.' 'Yes,' agreed Susanna, 'I did. She was amazed at her assurance—the assurance of desperation, she guessed. 'I wished to say that I should like very much to be permitted to take Miss Rosemary Weston's place. Not fill it, she continued hastily; 'it would require a long time, I think, before Meadville could find anyone to do that. But I am sure Miss Weston will tell you that I am competent to do her work. I like it very much and I'd like to be allowed to try.' With her hands folded in her lap she sat very straight. A great weight had rolled off her mind, and she found suddenly that she hardly cared whether they decided in her favor or not. She had put down the last figure. Perhaps she could be the new librarian's assistant. 'Miss Bryer,' said the judge, 'I'm going to be frank with you; Susanna's heart sank a little, but she smiled. 'We have talked with Miss Weston, and she recommended you strongly for her position; but we felt that you were very young, and that the importance of this town in the summer season made it necessary to have some one with experience and poise in the library. In short, Miss Bryer, we were a little afraid that you would not have sufficient dignity. But I think,' he paused and glanced at the others, 'and I believed that my fellow board members will agree with me, that you have eased that impression. Your businesslike directness in making appointments with us and coming straight to the point are greatly in your favor. And I wish to add,' said the judge boyishly, 'that a young lady who can walk into the presence of a group of men, one of whom I know picked her down from a cherry tree—only a few days ago, it seems—and the rest of whom no doubt seen her in your mother!'

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat. No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite. To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic. 'I was ill for four months with catarrh in the head and throat. Had a bad cough and raised blood. I had become discouraged when my husband bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and persuaded me to try it. I advise all to take it. It has cured and built me up.' Mrs. Helen Boyer, West Liscomb, N. S.

A SEVERE COLD

THE LIKE SHE NEVER HAD

Our advice to you is, never neglect what at first appears to be but a slight cold. You think you are strong enough to shake it off, but colds are so easily fought off in this northern climate, and if they are not attended to at once they may, sooner or later, develop into some more serious lung trouble. Mrs. Edward Kincaid, 60 Bryden St., St. John, N.B., writes: "I wish to express my hearty thanks to your valuable remedy, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and what good it did me. Last fall I contracted a serious cold, the like I never had. My head and nostrils were so clogged up I could get no vent, and could scarcely get my breath. I tried remedy after remedy until at last I thought I would try "Dr. Wood's." After the first dose I felt relief, and by the time the bottle was finished I was better. I wish to extend my thanks to your valuable remedy. After this I will always keep a bottle in the house."

similarly embarrassing predicaments of the tomboy age—well, a young lady who can walk into the presence of such a group and soberly begin her remarks—Gentlemen, possesses dignity enough to hold any position that Meadville has to offer. Is the young lady to be our librarian, gentlemen?

And suddenly they were all congratulating Susanna warmly, but with a little reserve and deference, too, that was balm to her. Before she went upstairs to tell mother, before she even stopped to take off her hat, she telephoned granddad. 'Sorry to get you out of bed,' she apologized shamelessly. 'But I put down the last figure, granddad. And the answer was right.'—Youth's Companion.

Halifax, N. S. Minard's Liniment Co., Ltd. Gentlemen—I have used Minard's Liniment and have found it a good remedy. After the explosion I was pretty well shaken up, having quite a number of bruises and cuts, but thanks to Minard's Liniment I am my old self again. It healed the sores and bruises and gave me much relief. It is true to its name as the King of Pain, for it stopped the pain at once. I first noticed the ad in the Montreal Standard and decided to invest in a bottle, for which I am not sorry, but can say with truth that I am thankful for it having done all it claimed to do, and in my case much more, and a satisfied customer is the best ad one can possibly find. That is my view of it and I think you will agree with me too.

Yours very truly, (Signed) ALFRED BLAIN, 181 Agricola St., Halifax, N. S.
