TUESDAY'S DAILY. A STATESMAN OF THE EMPIRE.

The most distinguished Canadian of this age is the guest of Edmonton today. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is more than a national figure, he is a statesman of the Empire. His words carry weight beyond the confines of the Dominion; the trend of his policy is measured and weighed in lands which he has never seen and by people to whom he owes no official obligation.

To Sir Wilfrid belongs credit not only for having attained this honor, but as well for having done much to make such honor attainable to a colonial statesman. That it is attainable is because the scattered people who own allegiance to the British flag recognize and realize as never before their relationship, their mutual interests, their common duties, opportunities and aspirations.

It is this closer realization of unity that makes the speech of one colonial leader a matter of deep and vital concern to people living in distant continents, across thousands of miles of sea, and under different governments. And it is this living interest broader than of Imperial statesmanship.

The Empire owes Sir Wilfrid Laurier much for what he has done to arouse this community of feeling among its scattered peoples. In Canada he set the fine example of founding his power and making his political fortunes on unity instead of division.

constitutions from the Mother Land and are working out their destinies on lines similar to our own. This is by no means all Sir Wilfrid has contributed to the awakening of the Imperial spirit. The preferential tariff was a fine combination of business and sentiment which has done much to awaken British interest in Canada.

NONE OF THE PUBLIC'S BUSINESS. The strength of the high tariff cause in Canada has been the presumed success of high tariff in the United States. The wonderful development along industrial and commercial lines which has occurred in the Republic during the last half century has been faithfully credited to the fact that manufactured goods were not allowed to enter the country except under a heavy handicap.

Another high tariff has helped hindered the development of manufacturing south of the boundary need not be argued: It would be remarkable if an agency for which such great claims have been made deserved no credit at all for the results achieved during its existence.

But from the Canadian high protectionist position, resources and people of the United States have got little credit for the development their country has experienced. The tariff did it all, or so nearly all that the other factors could be left out of the count without doing injustice.

Of late, however, things have not been going well with the high tariff and its friend across the line. The high tariff it has been found to be a god-mother to other and less desirable things than "infant industries." Trusts, mergers, combines and other accretions to concentration and alligators of the industrial world have been born beneath its shelter and grown to menacing proportions under its friendly protection.

public and should be remembered when next they are asked to vote for high tariff candidates. "At Olathe, in Kansas, Senator Albert B. Cummings took up the case of the United States Steel corporation. The orator brought out for $500,000,000 the property of the Carnegie Steel company. The value of the whole at the time was only $30,000,000, that being the sum for which it was claimed it could be best liquidated.

prevail. Among themselves manufacturers are disputing the right of any industry to tariff protection unwarranted by the facts of the case and indefensible in the interests of the public. No political party in Canada would dare to go to the polls on a high protection policy.

conditions in the older Provinces has been due to the extension of railways and the other means which make settlement and development possible. Those means provided, the expansion has occurred in obedience to perfectly natural and plain laws of nature—and as an incident of this the economic conditions of the older provinces have been revolutionized and immeasurably bettered.
