"The Great White God."

One hundred thousand pounds, dead

That was the price put on the head of Colonel T. E. Lawrence, the young Army and 1,000 officers and men, es-Oxford student and linguist, who did caping on his racing camel by a narmore than any single man to bring row margin. about the conquest of Palestine and the downfall of the Turks.

It was Lawrence who raised an army of 200,000 Arabs, whose dashing

To the Arabs themselves he was known as "the great white God," and so highly did they esteem him that he was given the rank of Emir, equivalent to Prince. The story of "The Uncrowned King of Arabia" (as related by Lowell Thomas in 'The Strand Magazine') finished with chenille. reads more like a chapter from the Arabian Nights than the life-story of French combination. an Englishmen. In 1908, when he was only nineteen, and before he had finand his University work voung Lawrence urged his parents to allow him to go to the Near East. "At the time," says Mr. Thomas, in story, "he was engaged in writing a book on the military architecture of the Crusades, and he wanted to go over the actual ground covered by the permission and £100.

"As soon as he arrived in Syria he adopted native costume and tramped Phone 367. Office: Clift's Cove. barefoot over thousands of miles of unknown desert country, living with the various Bedouin tribes. When he finally returned to England to complete his studies, he still had £50 left of the original sum."

Given Unlimited Power.

He acquired an extraordinary knowledge of languages-French, Italian, German, Spanish, Dutch, and Norwegian-while he is one of the greatest living Arabic scholars.

It is easy to understand the value of such a man to the authorities when war broke out, and he was ultimately given a commission as a secondlieutenant in the Map Department. The British generals who spent many hours poring over maps and discussing the possibilities of different plans for breaking up the Turkish Empire would frequently ask the young lieutenant if he had any suggestions to make. He would point to short cuts across valleys, which he alone knew from his years of barefoot travelling. His suggestions were adopted, and in a short time he became known to all the commanding officers of the British forces in the East.

Ultimately this junior lieutenant, who hardly knew the A B C of Army tacties, was given unlimited power the Company having the largest

He had scores of narrow escapes while engaged in such hazardous work -or sport, as he regarded it. On one occasion he touched off one of his "tulips" under a train carrying the Commander-in-Chief of the Turkish

Colonel Lawrence hates war and hates soldiering. When he was performing these daring deeds his one ambition was to get back to the studies warfare was a veritable nightmare to he has now resumed. "Even after he attained the rank of colonel," says Mr. Thomas, "he preferred the uniform of second lieutenant.

"Lawrence rarely saluted, and when he did it was simply with a wave of the hand, as though he were saying 'Halloa, old man,' to a pal."
