Gars come to hand as an eight page, with a double column. One is a playful rendering of the oft-quoted phrase "Come along, John," while the other illustrates several ideal features of the Provincial exhibition. Grip also publishes a catalogue of the wonders to be found at the Provincial Exhibition, which is unique of its kind. The description abounds with wit, quip and fun, and forcibly recalls to mind one of the final paragraphs in "Barnaby Rudge," in which the raven gives a personal description of himself. For sale at Day's

Rifle Match.
GALT vs. HESPELER.
On Tuesday last the Rifle Clubs of Galt and Hesperel indulged in a friendly contest. It was "tended to have nine men on a side, but one of the Galt men falling to put in an appearance it was agreed to take the averages of the nine Hesperel marksmen, and pit them against the score of the eight Galt men.
The ranges fired were 200, 300 and 500 yards, and the square target was used.
The day was dull, but a capital light for good scoring, as a glance at the score below will show. Hesperel took the lead at 200 yards, but Galt by some capital shooting at 500 yards overtook them, passing them, and finally won the match by 6 points. The Hesperel men, however, made very fine, steady shooting, and it required the splendid scoring on the part of two or three of the Galt men to beat them. The following is the score of the match:

Terrible Disaster at Fall River

Cotton Mill Burned.

MANY OPERATIVES BURNED OR MAIMED.
BOSTON, Sept. 19.

The Granite Mills, at Fall River Massachusetts, were burned this morning.
The building contained some 700 men, women, and children. Many perished in the flames, while others jumped from the windows and were killed. The cries of the women and children were heart-rending.

The following is a full account of the fire. Mills Nos. 1 and 2 of the granite works had been running about 20 minutes when the operatives in No. 1, which an old mill were started with a cry of fear, and the escape of smoke from the fourth story. On this, next to the upper spinning department, there were nearly 100 girls at work, under a male overseer.
On the upper floor, the fifth, about 30 girls were employed spinning and warping cotton. These were the youngest of the operatives. With the alarm the flames seemed to leap up to this attic, coming from the windows below, and to the terror of all, a great tower in the centre of the building, which were all the stairs communicating with each story. The fire caught, as stated, in the male spinning room in the north-west end of the mill and, it is stated, from the friction in a mule head, at once igniting the oil lamp about it, and spreading by means of the oil on the floor and about each piece of machinery directly towards the centre tower, the only source of escape for those on the fourth and fifth stories besides the four fire escapes, two on the sides of each gable end. As it rushed over the flooring it instantly found substance in the wood-work, and once getting into the tower ran up to a level through the single entrance to the fifth story, then springing to the roof timber and filling two great rooms, 400 by 80 feet with dense black smoke and flames. While the flames were making such terrible headway the operatives became fairly wild.

The overseers at a glance saw there was no way possible to check the fire, and gave the sole attention to the rescue of those who had at work. They called to them to save themselves, and pointed out ways of escape. These were principally fly ladders, for the timid creatures dared not run the gauntlet of the tower. The overseer of the spinning room, who had self remained till he was nearly suffocated in smoke, states the scene in his room—and it must have been worse in that next below the stairs—cannot be depicted. Children ran about without any knowledge of what they were doing, crying and begging piteously to be saved yet wrenching themselves away when taken forcibly and carried to the tower where they were some chance, or to the iron ladder, to two scuttled windows of the south end which opened upon the roof balcony at the head of Twelfth-street fire-ladder. It was impossible to get a great majority to take even this method in order to save their lives. Some wanted clothing, and some this or that thing they knew not what. As the fire frightened them away from the foot of the roof-ladders they rushed to the windows at the south gable end, but they were nearly 60 feet from the ground and they dared not jump. Cotton ropes were put out for them to slide down by, and some took this chance, but in the effort several met with death or injury, for no sooner would the rope be lowered before there was a rush for it from the story below; too many would take hold of the rope which would part, and all clinging to it would come down in a bunch.
While such scenes were being enacted here, similar ones were going on in the male spinning room. The flames had ascended with quickness of thought to the staircase of the third or fourth floor, thereby cutting off the means of escape, but the operatives had the two ladders of the south gable directly before them and were urged by the overseers and citizens below to take them. Some did, but others, seeing their way blocked by the balcony and dropped or threw themselves from the gables, hardly looking at the iron ladders. There was ample time for every one who had been saved, had a right course been pursued, and it was not for want of direction that the girls lost their lives. The Superintendent, as soon as the alarm was given, rushed to the upper story, and with the overseers, did all that was possible to save life, and when the means provided for escape in the mill were managed to be greatly to compose the mill and smoke, the people on the ground procured beds and mattresses for the poor unfortunate to jump on, and many did throw themselves from the windows
