IT BROKE HIS HEART.

Young Lad Hangs Himself After Getting a Scolding.

New York, Sept. 15.—Nathaniel Alberts, f Hackensack, scolded his 16-year-old son Irving the other night, and the lad went out into a shed and hanged himself. Alberts is a wharf builder and house mover. He as a good reputation and some money. He pupil in the Union street public school, and was in Class A, the highest class in school. He was a studious boy and stood near the head of his class. He never associated with bad boys about town, and spent nearly all the time he was not at school at home doing chores. Often he lent a helping hand in the housework. He was in all ways, according to the neighbors and school teacher, an exemplary boy.

His father was not harsh with him, as a rule, but he sometimes scoled him if he didn't do his work just as he thought it should be dome. That was the case the night in question. He was studying his lessons when his father asked him to clean up the room and do some other housework. The boy started to do it, but not in a way to suit his father.

"Irving," said Mr. Alberts, "I want you to do what I tell you." He then scolded him he wanted it done in the first place. The boy didn't make any reply, but did as he was told. This was at 8:30 o clock. He was through the work in fifteen minutes, and said down to study again. At 9 o clock.

he was told. This was at 8:30 o'clock. He was through the work in fifteen minutes, and sat down to study again. At 9 o'clock he got up and went out the back door. He hadn't said a worn from the time his father had scolded him, and he didn't speak when he went out. His brother Elward and his father were in the room when he went out. They thought he had just gone to the back yard, and would return in a few minutes. He did not come back, and they went to bed, leaving the door unlocked. Feeling uneasy, however, Edward got up and on entering the shed at the back of the house found his brother Irving hanging by a rope attached to a beam. He was dead. Different explanations are volunteered, but the simplest is that the boy happened to be in a very depressed state of mind, and that he took his father's reprimand deeply to heart.

J. G. German claims to have felled the first tree on the grounds where the town of St. Marys now stands. This he accomplished on Tuesday, Sept. 7, 1841, and is, in all probability, the only representative of the little band who ate cold pork and bread for dinner on that memorable day, little dreaming that they were the pioneers of a prosperous and wealthy town.

The harvest is about completed throughout this county. Upon the whole grain is a tair crop, though oats and peas are light in some cases. Threshing has commenced.

The root crop is good, but it is feared that rot will seize the potatoes before they are raised if the wet weather continues.

Fruit upon the whole is a good crop. Apples and crab apples are a little extra.

We have had a very disagreeable harvest on account of the rain. It has been raining almost every day for the past week, and it is still raining.
